Leading banks cut base rates to $9\frac{1}{2}$ %

By David Smith, Economics Correspondent

Three of the big four high street banks cut their base rate from 10 to 91/2 per cent yesterday. Rates offered to depositors were reduced by half a percentage point.
The reduction will not have any immediate impact on mortgage reates. All the big building societies have announced mortgage rate cuts averaging one percentage point over the past fortnight. However, it should pave the way for still cheaper home loans in the

The banks are also to announce an early cut in the interest rates charged on Access and Barelaycards. Access now charges 2 per cent a month, and Barclaycard 1.75 per cent.

The base rate move, led by National Westminster, followed a reduction, late on Wednesday evening, of the discount rate in the United States from 9 to 81/2 per cenr. Lloyds and Midland followed, leaving Barclays, which reduced its base rate from 10 to 91/4 per cent on Monday, out of line. The announcement of lower base rates coincided with the publication of the trade figures for October, which showed a record visible trade deficit, of £851 million.

However, after taking into account the surplus on the invisible items of trade (services, interest and profits), of £250 million, and the £528 million rebate received from the unchanged at 75.1 and the EEC last month, the current pound gained 10 points against account: deficit was just £73 the dollar to $1.2275.

Mr Michael Eaton, the board's chief spokesman, last Friday predicted that the surge back would rise to at least 7,000 after a week in which 5,000 men abandoned their involvement in the conflict over pit closures.

The best available official estimate last night indicates that there are 63,000 members of the National Union of Mineworkers at work, and 123,000 on strike - approximately a 2-1 split in favour of staying out. The union is still claiming that 74 per cent of its coal-mining members are on strike.

The board's extended target of more than half the minersback at work by Christmas also looks to be over-optimistic, and the board is giving fresh thought to new measures to persuade pitmen to return. The Christmas bonus initiative expires today, and a substantial fall in

Inflation a factor in benefit cut

By Nicholas Timmins Social Services Correspondent

A fractionally smaller rise in inflation would have meant the extra sum to be deducted from miners' benefits when the rates rise on Monday would have been only 50p, not £1.

Under the formula used to calculate the uprating, the rise in prices is used and the result rounded to the nearest 50p. The Department of Health and Social Security said yesterday that under this year's calculation, the sum came to £15.76 - meaning the deduction had to be raised from £15 to £16. "To have done otherwise would have meant changing the law", a spokesman said.
The deduction from the benefits paid to dependents was first introduced in 1980 when it stood at £12. It has been uprated annually since, although never before in the sensitive circumstances of a dispute such as the miners' strike. According to DHSS figures, about 40,000 miners are receiving supplementary benefit during the dispute, with about £22m paid out so far.

Cot death risk 'if babies are too warm

By Nichelas Timmins Social Services

Parents may be poitting their babies at risk of cot death from overheating by wrapping them up too warmly or keeping them in oppressively hot rooms, a study in The Lancet suggests.

In research involving 34 cot deaths, Dr Anthony Stanton, consultant paediatrician at Scarborough Hospital, says that in all but two cases the babies were either unusually hot and sweating before death, died in unusually warm rooms, were overclothed or beneath layers of blankets, or had evidence of an infection which in many cases would not usually be greated. would not usually be expected to cause death.

A combination of the risks could turn a potential danger being too hot, or having an infection - into a lethal one, he SAYS.

Parents need t be educated away from the folk-lore that babies catch cold to te reality that many are at risk from overheating. No policy will stop all cot deaths, he says and in some cases, for example where there is a very low birth weight, keeping babies cool may not even be relevant. But overheating is a risk that is common and

In the study, babies had been put next to coal fires, or radiators. One 3 month old boy was in a warm room at night, swaddled in a large doubled blanket wrapped twice round him with two large woolen blankets folded into four on top.

Dr Stanton said parents needed to be sensible about how warm they kept their children. If they brought in a child well wrapped up against the cold after 2 trip outdoors, they needed to take off some of the

Tory concern over students' fees

By Lucy Hodges, Education Correspondent

Pressure on the Government Sir William van Straubenee, over its plans for student grants increased yesterday with the news that members of the Conservative backbench committee on education have asked Mr Peter Brooke, junior education minister, to talk to them. Mr Brooke, who is in charge of higher education, is not expected to have an easy ride at the meeting on December 5 which will be chaired by Mr David Madel, Conservative MP for Bedfordshire South West, chairman of the backbenchers' committee. Many Tory MPs are concerned about the Government's decision to make the better-off pay more towards the living costs and education of their offspring at university. Those on a residual income of more than £20,500 will have to pay £725 more a year towards the education of their offspring at

20% rise in pilgrims expected

By Derek Harris

Thomas Cook's specialist Travel, is expecting an apturn in pilgrimages next year.

An increase of up to a fifth in the number of travellers Inter-Church experts to carry next year was predicted yesterday by Mr Douglas Cady, the company's general manager.

That is likely largely because the Holy Land, which accounts for more than half of pilgrimage traffic, has seen return to greater political stability. A wider spectrum of people is also being attracted by Inter-Church.

Mr Cady said: "Predominantly older, single people have been going on pilgrimages, but there is a growing trend for married couples to go".

In er-Church, established in 1954 to promote Christian unity through travel, possibly accounts for up to a fifth of those making pilgrimages, Mr Cady estimates, It expects to carry about 10,000 people this year, but not all will have been pilgrims; Inter-Church also-offers cultural tours and

All Inter-Church tours have leaders, usually clergy, to add a dimension of specialized know-ledge, especially on the pilgrimages.

Among the tours are an annual St Francis one including Rome and Assisi, tours of the ancient pilgrim route across northern Spain to the shrine of St James at Santiago de Compostella, and a tour tracing the steps of St Paul on his second and third missionary ourneys from Galatia to Prices next summer will rise by about 5 per cent. Some of the Inter-Church tour prices are down, especially some of those based on Italy, Crete, Turkey and Greece. Holy Land tours start at £499 for 10 days, but on eight-day tour is being introduced next summer priced at £429.

Howe, the Foreign Secretary that Britain was giving notice to Unesco of withdrawal from that organization at the end of next year was greeted with protests from both sides of the Commons during the debate on public expenditure on overseas aid. He said that the position would be reconsidered at the end of next year in the light of the result of the general conference to be held then. The decision about the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization would have no effect on 1985-86 expenditure but would keep Britain's options open.

Sunday trading statement | Wednesday: Elections (Northern Ireland) Bill, completion of remainearly next year

A government statement was likely to be made on amending the Shops Act, 1950, which restricted Sunday trading, early next year, Mr Leen Brittan, the Home Secretary, said in the Commons during exchanges in which MPs came out in favour and against Sunday trading.

Conservative Party believed in the rule of law and he would not urge local councils not to prosecute

He said the committee of inquiry under Mr Robin Auld, which had inder Mr Kooth Auid, which had looked into proposals for amending the 1950 Act, had carried out a valuable study which would be considered most carefully. There was general agreement that the present law was unsatisfactory.

Mr Michael Brown, (Brigg and Cleethorpes, C): In view of the manimity of views in the commission's study that the shops Act should be repealed, does Mr Brittan intend to bring forward legislation either in this session or during the diffetime of this Parliament to reform the 1950 Act?

If Dr FitzGerald thought that the prospects of a settle-ment were still alive he would presumably not have blown his top. That he did so suggests that he now thinks it more important to repair his political bridges at home than to pursue a settlement with Britain which

That Mrs Thatcher spoke as she did in the House of Commons yesterday suggests that she too believes that the present dialogue is doomed. Otherwise she would hardly have dismissed Dr FitzGerald's complaints so brusquely as to say that she did not understand his statement in any way.

Lack of finesse in British diplomacy

If this pessimistic analysis is correct it is a pity. An agreement between the British and Irish governments based opon the acceptance by the Irish people that they no longer claimed sovereignty over the whole of Ireland would have een the most hopeful development for the North for many

The present impasse can be attributed partly to a lack of fluesse in British diplomacy, but also to a more fundamental

At the end of the negotiations at Chequers there were no specific agreements, except on pursuing the dialogue, but both sides thought that they had established a good re-lationship. Mrs Thatcher liked Dr FitzGerald and his ministerial colleagues, which is not

The Irish have three principal complaints: that the tone of those comments did not correspond with the way in which the issues had been discussed at Chequers; that the detailed proposals in the New Ireland Forum report were dismissed in summary fashion without acknowledging its broadly con-structive and conciliatory approach; and that in playing down the idea that there was alienation among Roman Catholics in the north, British ministers were rejecting out of hand the basic analysis of the Irish Government.
It would be difficult to acquit

British ministers of the charge of diplomatic clumsiness. In their choice of words they might have shown more appreciation of Dr FitzGerald's position. To display sensitivity in the conduct of diplomacy is not weakness but come

It would also have been wise to accept, as British ministers have in effect done in the past. that there is alienation among man Catholics in the north. facts in the face. But British Ministers are right that joint authority in Northern Ireland cannot be conceded to the republic, either by the front or the back door. There was specific disagreement at Chequers on that point in relation to a joint security

The Irish saw that as means to share authority in the north. British ministers insisted that there could be no more than consultation. Had they failed to do so, they would have been allowing the negotiations to proceed on a fraudulent basis. No state can concede ultimate authority over its internal security without compromising its own sover-

The only way in which agreement might have been reached on that question could have been for the Irish to be prepared to build on the basis of consulation. They might have achieved a good deal of practical influence in that way.

But perhaps their failure to do so shows that the gap in policy remains too wide to be bridged. In that case, this episode will have confirmed in and bitter fashion that there is still no common ground in the province.

High Nissan pay lures Austin men away

Motoring Correspondent Nissan, the Japanese car company, has lured 19 senior managers from the British car industry to run the car assembly plant it is building at Washing-ton, Tyne-and-Wear, The prime target for the "head-hunters" was Austin Rover's Cowley complex, from which six madu-

Others come from Ford, Vauxhali, Rolls-Royce, and Land Rover. All are believed to have been tempted away by up to twice their existing salaries. At Cowley, however, an equally important factor was managers' frustration with production losses caused by wildcat strikes and constant pressure from diectors for improved results. Nissan has insisted on

The most senior Austin Rover recruit is Mr. Joh Cusnaghan, aged 38, the manufacturing manager at Cowley South works. He joins Nissan next week at a reported salary of £30,000 as production director. Mr. Cusnaghan was quoted in The Engineer as describing the move as "an opportunity I could not miss".

Nissan originally set its sights even higher. An offer by the company was rejected by Mr Andrew Barr, one of the two joint managing directors at Austin Rover.

He launched his campaign in a letter to Mr Nicholas Ridley, the Secretary of State for Transport. It called for a more informative, imaginative and commerical roads policy.

Millions of vehicles used the M4 out of London each year, it said, yet there was no sign pointing out Windsor Castle.

Mr Neale said signposting on local roads to tourist facilities and attractions was poor and inconsistent. Approved flag signs should become the responsibility of local parish and town councils.

He suggested a standard programme for signs for amenities such as fun parks, museums, potteries, bed and breakfast facilities and tea shops, all of which might bear a county symbol if desired.

Mr Neale said that proposals would be likely to encourage tourists and so increase employment potential and help small businesses. On suggestions that installing more signs would create road safely dangers, he said that road users hesitation when unable to find signs was already a danger. Standard signs might be expected to improve the environment in many areas where undesirable signs were proliferating.

He asked Mr Ridley to invite county councils to join the Department of Transport, in starting a comprehensive libera-lized sign policy.

Arafat arrival in Jordan finalizes the PLO break with Damascus

Under the protection of the king who drove it from Jordan in 1970, Yassir Arafat's Pale-Stine Liberation Organization (PLO) last night prepared to formalize the split that has torn apart the Palestinian guerrilla movement for more than 18 months.

While Palestinian groups opposed to Mr Arafat were still threatening to create a rival PLO in Damascus, Mr Arafat's decision to turn up in Amman for the meeting of the PLO's Palestine National Council still rather pompously called a "parliament-in-exile" - also means that his own break with Syria is now final.

Despite the absence of about 180 members of the Palestine National Council who live in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip and who were prevented by the Israelis from travelling to Amman, the "parliament" achieved a quorum of its 379 members, taus producing the constitutional legality which the PLO so often seeks for its own movement and so rarely respects in others.

It was, of course, not lost on the Syrians that the meeting was to be inaugurated by King Husain of Jordan, the very man who broke the power of the PLO 14 years ago by driving it into Lebanon and, ultimately, newspapers trumpeted King

Jordan has a 26-strong affair as a betrayal of the Arab cause was made even sharper by the fact that the Palestine National Council meeting might otherwise have been held in Damascus under the stern auspices of the Syrian Baath

Sri Lanka's 30 hours of curfew

From Donovan Moldrich Colombo

Sri Lankans awoke yesterday to find that a 30-hour curfew had come into force at midnigh and would remain in operation till six this morning. As only one newspaper had carried a stop press announcment, news of the curfew was broadast at 10-minute intervals by the state-owned radio and spread by word of mouth. While most people rushed to buy food, which soared in price, early officegoers and schoolchildren were directed home by police. The Minister of National Security, Mr Lalith Athulath-mudali, said there had been only one isolated incident late on Wednesday night which had been put down effectively and firmly with no injury or loss of life but that anti-social elements would try to create trouble by spreading false rumours.

In the incident the Minister referred to, a Tamil shop at Thimbirigasaya in Colombo was set on fire by unknown

Mr Athulathmudali said the Government was not over-reacting but had imposed the curfew a purely precautionary measure.

Parliament met yesterday to continue its budget debate, and the Minister of Lands. Mr Gamini Bissanayake said the curfew had been imposed because the Government did not want to run the risk of a repetition of the ethnic disturbances in July 1983 in which more than 400 people died.

Yesterday and today were declared holidays and curfew permits were issued at police stations only to those engaged in essential services and airline passengers.

To ensure that there is no breakdown in food supplies the state-owned cooperative wholesale establishment, the market-ing department, and the port cargo corporation were declared essential services and bakers were directed to bake as much bread as possible for which flour supplies were made available.

Streets in Colombo and all over the island were deserted with no public or private transport.

peace talks last month between Government and guerrilla lead-

The American-backed Army has been hit hard, but a longawaited guerrilla offensive failed to materialize. All neutral observers here agree that stalemate persists in the five-year civil war and that the reasons remain strong for both sides to continue a dialogue.

A close observer of the military scene drew an analogy with the ex-boxers Muhammad Ali and Joe Frazier. The Army is like Frazier, he said - strong firepower, keeps on coming forward, keeps getting bruised. The Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, like Ali, is good on mobility and stinging surprise attacks.

Since the October 15 peace talks the Army has mounted "sweep" operations, involving several thousand men, in the two provinces where the guerrillas exercise most control -Chalatenango and Morazan. The guerrillas have been

With Uruguay's first general elections since 1971 coming up on Sunday, this tiny country has been overwhelmed by the cuphoria of political campaigns in their final feverish week. But political and diplomatic anaysts warn that the military will be waiting in the wings for the elected government to falter after it takes over next March 1.

"The military are going back to the barracks, but whether they stay there depends on how we run our democracy", said Senor Enrique Tarigo, the vice-presidential candidate of the traditional Colorado Party.

Running a democratic government will be no easy ask. The economy is in its worst recession since the 1930s. unemployment is at 15 per cent and the $4.6bn (£3.7bn) foreign debt represents $1,550 for every man, woman and child - the second highest per capita total in Latin America.

Aggravating matters is an antiquated political system which analysts say is likely to breed confusion and conflict. An electoral law dating from the turn of the century allows each political party to put forward as many candidates as there are factions within it and the most popular party is allowed to name the President. The result, said Senor Juan

Rial, a political scientist, is that the parties "are simply electoral alliances which tend to split up Since a close election is expected between the traditional Blanco and Colorado parties and the left-wing Broad Front, "the President will really have to scramble to put together a governing coalition", Senor Rial said.

Diplomats, politicians and academics alike agree that cooperation between the parties will provide the only chance of coping with expected controversies over economic matters and calls for the prosecution of human rights violations. Indian state assembly dissolved From Kuldip Nayar

The State Assembly of Andhra Pradesh, a Southern Indian State, has been dissolved on the recommendation of Mr N. T. Rama Rao the Chief Minister. This is the second state to do so: the first was Tamil Nadu. The Andhra Pradesh Assem-

Zapu rebels to die for kidnap of tourists

From Jan Raath

Two unrepentant guerrillas were sentenced to death yesterday for their part in the kidnep of six tourists in July 1982.

Gilbert Ngwenya, aged 42 and Austin Mpofu, aged 25 ignored court proceedings to the end, asserted that the tourists were still alive, and repeated their demands for the release of Zapu detainees and return of Zapu property confiscated by

As Mr Justice Sandura left to consider sentence with his two assessors. Ngwenya raised a clenched fist and shouted. Forward with the people's revolution until victory. Forward with the people who are fighting in the bush. And I say power to the people."

The judge returned to say he had found both men guilty. He sentenced them to death on aix counts of abduction, which is an act of terrorism in Zimbabwe law and a capital offence.

Last week. Mpofu was sen-tenced to death for the murder of a policeman, five white men and their families in Matchele-land in early 1982.

The six tourists were two Britons, Mr James Greenwell, aged 21. of Liverpool, Mr Martin Hodgson, aged 38, of Peterborough; two Americans, Mr Brett Baldwin, aged 25, and Mr Kevin Ellis, aged 26, both of Seattle, and two Australians, Mr Tony Bajzelz, aged 27, and Mr William Butler aged 33.

When the trial opened on Wednesday, a statement by Newenya to police was read to the court. It said he was leader of a group of 19 guerrillas who lorry about 50 miles north of Bulawayo on July 23.

The six tourists spent three months in Matabeleland North before they were allegedly taken to the site of an old Zipra (the military wing of Zapu in Zimbabwe's liberation war) base in Zambia.

There, the statement said, they were handed over to "some Soviet people" who were told they must keep these six tourists for us till we receive our property and people who are arrested without reason". The Soviet Embassy here said

RAF extends Ethiopia famine relief airlift

From Thomson Prentice, Addis Ababa

The RAF famine relief airlift has extended its operations in Ethiopia by flying food supplies to the north-west of the country. The first supplies were flown yesterday to Gondar, 40 miles north of Lake Tana, the source of the Blue Nile, and 350 miles from the capital.

The area is usually one of the more fertile stretches of the country but has also been badly affected by drought. The two Hercules transport planes are continuing to take huge daily cargoes of grain, blankets and other supplies to the aid of scores of thousands of starving peasants at feeding centres in Mekele and Aksum in the northern highlands, from the port of Assab.

Yesterday one of the four crews was flying home to RAF Lyneham in Wiltshire on leave. The airmen were reluctant to be detached from the operation. Because right from the start the Government hasn't been interested in any objections to their proposals to abolish the GLC. Even from their own MP's.

As far as they're concerned, you can either like it or lump it. Which is why they went ahead and published the Abolition Bill yesterday.

Even though they now know that over 74%* of Londoners are opposed to it.

Not all of these Londoners favour the current administration at County Hall either.

But it's the one that Londoners voted for at the last GLC elections. And the one that Londoners could have just as easily voted out at the next elections.

That is, had the Government not scrapped them.

"HARMS RESEARCH (THANKS TV SURVEY AMONSST 1027 ADULTS IN GREATEX LONDON IN SUPTEMBER 1984

Quite simply, the people of London want the right to decide for themselves who runs their city.

It's a right they deserve. One which they've had for almost a hundred years and one which people have in every other capital city in the western world.

The Government has attempted to excuse itself by talking about devolution.

That is, giving more power to the Borough Councils.

But it's pure deceit.

The fact of the matter is, in terms of expenditure over two thirds of the GLC's responsibilities won't go to the Borough Councils at all.

They'll go to Whitehall quangos and joint boards which are not directly elected.

A system of administration that isn't just undemocratic but one which politicians on both sides predict will result in organisational chaos.

In the first year alone, it will cost London ratepayers an extra £65 million.

It's a blatant misuse of central Government power which we will continue to campaign against on behalf of Londoners.

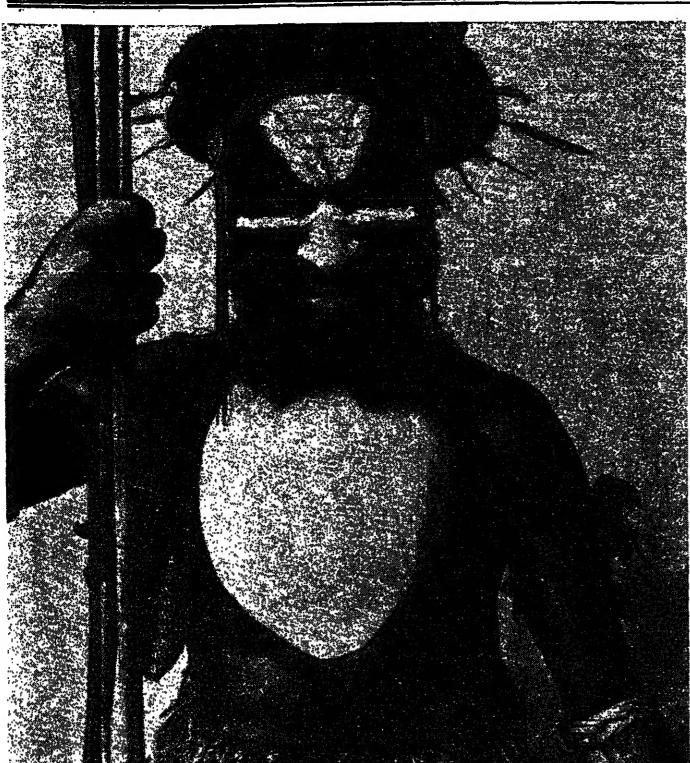

The Houses of Parliament have yet to approve the Bill before it becomes law.

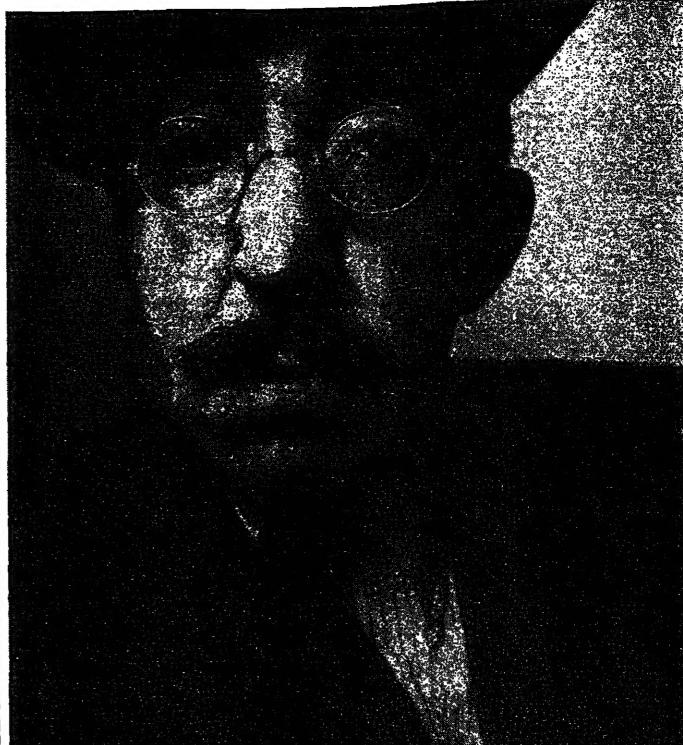

The Government has turned its back on the people of London.

We appeal to the House of Commons and the House of Lords not to.

Why I am having a baby for my sister

As MPs today debate the Warnock report which recommends banning surrogate mothers, Nicholas Timmins talks to two women and a gynaecologist who believe this kind of pregnancy can be justified

Two and a half years ago, both commercial and non-Glenda Eason, now aged 40, commercial, which would renwoke up after an operation to remove a growth at Hammer-smith Hospital, London, to find her womb had been taken away.

After seven years of desperately trying to have a child through the rounds of the infertility clinics and more investigations than she can remember, she found that a surgical emergency had necessitated her uterus being removed. Her chances of having a child seemed to have gone for good.

"I can't tell you what it feels like when there's absolutely no hope", she says, "I had gone into hospital thinking that this was going to be the answer after years of disappointment.

When I woke up and found what they had done, there was no hope. The chance was gone for good. It was devastating."

'We are just using Jacki as a suitcase really, an incubator to carry it?

liable to prosecution The idea that Jacki might have a baby for Glenda occurred to the two woman almost simultaneously.

"We had considered adoption", said Glenda, "But we are too old to be given the chance and there are too few babies."
Dennis added: "Birth control and abortion mean there just aren't many children available and they always tend to go to younger parents".

Fostering, she says, would be fine if she already had a family. Without one, "I couldn't do that I couldn't have a baby and then give it back after a few months or even years".

Glenda says she saw newspaper report. about mother abroad having a baby for her daughter. "I started thinking about it, wondering if Jacki could have a baby for me." I doubt if I would ever have got round to asking her, but the very next day she just offered". Jacki says: "She didn't need asking twice". Her motive, she says, was simply that she was very close to her sister and hadseen what she had gone

"I can normally have babies It was some weeks later that so easily and when a member of your family can't, it makes you feel a little bit guilty. I've been so lucky. I've got three healthy kids. She's been so unlucky".

Their original idea was that

Jacki would have a baby by artifical insemination, using Dennis's sperm and her egg. But they realized that the test-tube technique could give Glenda and Dennis a child that sperm - would be banned.

The committee recommended a ban on surrogate mothers, genetically was their own - created from Glenda's egg and Dennis's sperm in the laboratory and simply carried by Jacki. The first attempt failed and now they are trying again.

Glenda says that if the testtube treatment fails, they may yet want to try the other route. But she sees there would be

'It's their child. In a way it's got nothing to do with me at all'

Glenda says: "We are just using Jacki as a suitcase really, an incubator to carry it. At the end of the day it's our child." When they put the idea to Robert Winston, they say, he told Glenda it was too soon after the operation. Months later, after lengthy discussion, he agreed to go ahead.

Jacki says she sees no problem in handing the child over. "Ive got my family. I don't want any more children but I do enjoy being pregnant. want to keep it. It's not mine, it belongs to Glenda and Dennis.

"I can't say how I would feel after currying it for nine months if it was Dennis's sperm but my egg. I would go into that fully believeing that I could quite happily hand it over after it was born, but I don't think anyone could be 100 per cent sure beforehand in those circumstances. But this way it's entirely different. It's their child. In a way it's got nothing to do with me at all."

Jacki says she has talked through the issues with ber eldest son, aged 16, and he is happy about it. Her boyfriend wasn't sure at first, but when it was explained to him he was very, very supportive".

If the treatment fails, Jacki says, she might be prepared to try having the baby by artificial insemination with Dennis's sperm. "But I think we would have to sit down and do a lot more soul searching first." There could be problems explaining that to the child

The two sisters are more divided on whether other forms of surrogacy should be banned.

Jacki says: "I think it should be kept in the family circle. I would be against somebody. paying thousands of pounds. No way could I do it for anyone else not even a close friend.

Glenda too has reservations about commercial surrogacy, but being childless can see the pressure and is loathe to condemn it should not be presecuted, anyone who assisted in creating a surrogate pregnancy should be fiable to criminal prosecution.

What they and Dennis are clear about is that there is nothing wrong in what they hope to achieve - one sister carrying a child for another - an arrangement done for love not money. "In cases like ours where it can help a woman have a child who otherwise couldn't have one, where is the harm?' asks Glenda.

The minority report firmly opposed commercial surrogate agencies. But it suggested that adoption and fostering agencies should be allowed to arrange sprrogate pregnancies.

'We feared

This week Dame Mary Warnock, chairman of the committee, said: "I think the minority report on surrogacy enght certainly to be given a better rem for its money".

In cases where money did not change hands, she said, and an adoption agency or gynaecolo-gist arranged the pregnancy, "there is a great deal to be said

In a case where a sister could use the test-tube haby technique to have a child that would be the offspring of the parents who would bring it up "there is an even stronger case".

She said: "In the end couldn't think of a way to draft legislation without leaving it legislation without leaving II, open to people to put up their plates and start a little agency."

But Professor Malcolm McNaughton, now President of the Royal College of Obstatricians and Gynaecologists and a member of the Warnock Committee, said he had finally come to believe that surrogacy, even by the test-tabe annuously. even by the test-tube approach, should not be allowed.

"That a woman should carry a child and hand it over by nent is macceptable". Where sisters were involved the problems could be even greater. "If they are close, she will be seeing the child, watching it grow up. The fact that she has had the baby but given it to her sister could lead to all sorts of possible problems which would not be in the interests of the child."

Doctor defends the case for saying yes

ston, senior lecturer in obstetrics and gynaecology at the Royal Postgraduate Medical School "In some rare cases I belive there must be exceptions to a general ban on surrogacy."

he said, the couples themselves had suggested that the test-tube baby technique might provide them with a child.

"They are very mature responsible people. They recognise the risks there might be that the child might be born defective; that there might be a major complication of pregnancy in which the sister could was no possibility of her wanting to keep the child. She was doing it for the most even die; that she might want to keep the child. They came to the conclusion that there was no problem with which they couldn't cope".

Before he agreed to undertake treatment, he said, he discussed the case with five consultant colleagues, including the two professors of gynaecology at Hammersmith Hospital, and the psychiatrist who treated Glenda Eason. "Three of them talked to the couple and there was total unanimity that in this' case is was a proper and of cases and I have grave acceptable method of treat-reservations about commercial

The sister, he said, did not want to bring up any more children herself, but offered this to her sister as an "act of charity".

He knew of another case at a different hospital where such treatment was "perfectly appropriate". There the woman had test-tube baby treatment which

*These cases have my every sympathy and I cannot see any objections to surrogacy where it is a carefully thought out decision in response to a clear medical need.

Such cases are very rare. But I think it would be wrong to make helping them a criminal offence. Certainly surrogacy is undesirable in the vast majority reservations about commercial agencies. There is a good case for making that illegal because of the huge risk of exploitation of desperate couples and that poor women would risk pregnancy for the money. That I find abhorrent.

AIDS: the real risks

At a teaching hospital lunch given two months ago, all the doctors pre-sent agreed that the outbreak of ATDS had influenced their decisions about recommending blood transfu-homosexual? Doctors involved in the treatment of sexually transmitted diseases, and in arrang-ing blood transfusions, draw heavily on their experience with the hepatitis B virus. The epidemiology of this virus corresponds very closely to that of virus HTLV3, which is certainly associated with AIDS, if possibly not the sole cause.

Recent developments at the Royal Free Hospital, London, make it possible that within three to five years the dangers inherent in using extract of pooled blood will be a hazard of the past.
Professor Michael Adler, who works at the Middlesex Hospital and holds the only British chair funded for the study of sexually transmitted diseases says the danger of AIDS (Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome) is still confined to well recognized groups: practissexual means? risk? Is it wise to share a treatment, drug addicts who use bathroom or lavatory with a rusty needles, and prostitutes.

Professor Adler sees no reason for heterosexuals to change their lifestyle, but thinks homosexual men would be well advised to cut down on their number of partners. He does not feel that bisexuality is common enough to alter the way in which the disease may be established in Britain. All doctors seem to agree that the antibody test, which has been devised to test patients' blood to see it they have been exposed to HTLV3 virus, is difficult to interpret. And evidence suggests that for every ten people who are attacked by HTLV3 virus, probably only one will develop AIDS HTLV3 virus, probably only one will develop AIDS.

Dr John Barbara, a virologist with the National Blood Transfusion Service who has recently written a book on microbiology and blood transfusions, said HTLV3 virus can be found in most body fluids, but is only in large quantites in blood and

So the peck on the cheek for increased for haemophiliac the party hostess from a homosexual guest will not matter, nor will the dirty glass or even the misdirected sneeze.

It seems that the semen of infectious bisexual men could be a danger to female partners. However, it would be surprising if a woman later developed AIDS with the virus in large enough quantities to be a risk to others. Fortunately, the vaginal mucosa seems less vulnerable to viruses than the anal or rectal wall, so women may prove less resistant to infection.

Accurate study is difficult, as the AIDS incubation period

after infection is up to five years. But a survey of 1,000 blood donors found that not one of those surveyed had antibodies to HTLV3 virus, showing that the risk of an ordinary transfusion is very slight.

If the number of infected and Recent research at Moor-fields Eye Hospital now offers hope to sufferers. Mr John Elston. Tension is mounting among the four London orchestras over where the Arts Council's axe may fall. Neil Duncan - the "hit man" employed by the Arts Council to pick an orchestra to cut from the budget has now delivered his confidential report and his recommendations have been initially accepted by the music panel. They have yet to be considered by the finance com-mittee and the full Arts Council Duncan's report is shrouded in Secrecy but rumours are rife.

The Arts Council has given off-the-record assurances of continued funding to the LSO, but there are fears that these could clash with the contents of the Duncan Report. Last summer Duncan said ominously: "The council doesn't want to postpone indefinitely coming to a decision."

There to rule on the lawnot to make it

When I sought recently to update the information I was mildly surprised with the reply from Sir Michael Havers, the Attorney General, that it was not fully available or readily accessible up to 1982. However, he was able to state that in the years ending July 1983 and June 1984, 28 High Court judges were engaged in non-judicial Recent attacks on "Tory judges" are misplaced. There are no Tory judges. There are judges who are Tories, judges who are socialists, and judges whose views occupy the middle ground, and possibly some who are extremely apolitical. The attackers confuse the interpreters of the law with the laws which many of us abhor, since they are particularly pernicious Tory laws. Should we not ensure that judges do not become political shuttlecocks?

Two recent incidents have brought such concern to the forefront. The first was the unfortunate, though of course innocent, discussion on industrial relations between the Master of the Rolls, Lord Donaldson, and the newly appointed Permanent Secretary at the Department of Employment, Mr Quinlan. The second was the Sir Patrick Mayhew, that the views given by the president of the Family Division to the Commons on a disputed proposed clause in the Matrimonial Proceedings Bill might with advantage be cirulated to anxious solicitors. The first incident prompted the limited practical value. This particular incident raises the question as to how it arose in the first place. The Commons adopted the procedure for this particular non-party but nevertheless contro-versial Bill of hearing evidence before a select committee from eminent and concerned witnesses. It turned out to be a valuable experience and the views of judges were very helpful. Nevertheless, if the judiciary and the legislature, let alone the executive, are not to become incestuous in their relationship, great care must be exercised.

The extension of the judicial review's ambit over administrative decisions has brought judges closer to the field of controversial adminis-trative decision-making. The courts have been careful to say that they are not substituting their own views for the decision-maker, although the decision is easily blurred.

It is, admittedly, difficult to maintain a cordon sanitaire around our judges. The temptation for politicians to pass the buck is obvious. The temptation for judges, either her comment or action, to either by comment or action, to enter fields which would be better avoided, I believe, can be substanrially resisted.

I do not believe our judges on the whole are fitted by training to carry out tasks which politicians find too diffincult. They are eminently qualified to hear and assess evidence, but frequently more than evidence is involved in the basis for an administrative decision. The judicial development of the concept of judicial review has its own perils, particularly where the administrative acts of government are

The legislature should be careful in its invitations to judges to assist in the legislative process. Politicians soon enough will use their good name to buttress their own particular arguments. Lord Scarman may be sui gereris, and we are grateful to him, but I am sure he, above all would appreciate the danger of each of the Lords of Appeal in Ordinary putting his own sixpennyworth to solve some of tomorrow's problems.

Can Reagan rein in his hawks?

Washington Second terms have not been happy experiences for American presidents in recent years. Both Johnson and Nixon won landslides which were as impressive as that just achieved by President Reagan, yet the popularity they enjoyed at the moment of victory was soon replaced by hate and humiliation. Americans were even glad to see the back of such an endearing leader as Eisenhower by the time his second term expired. Will Reagan's second term be any

He wants to go down in history as the man who charted a new political course for the country, who presided over, as he puts it, the "second American revolution - and as the reductions with the Soviet Union.

The view in Washington is that he may very well make progress with the Russians who seem anxious to nut aside the cold war rhetoric of the past four years and get back to the nuclear negotiating table. But if he is to succeed he must quell internal strife between Administration moderates and hawks.

On domestic policy, particularly the economy, his chances of further reducing the role of government may well founder on the ever-expanding Federal budget deficit. His critics are already taking bets as to which of the president's campaign pledges - not to raise taxes, to preserve a "safety net" for the poor or to maintain a high level of defence spending - he will have to break first in order to keep the deficit in check.

President Reagan has spent the past week at his California ranch pondering over policy priorities and weighing the disparate advice of his aides who nevertheless agreed on one point - the president must move quickly if he is to have a reasonable chance of achieving his objectives.

The electorate ignored the deficit warnings voiced by Walter Mondale, the Democratic challenger, during the campaign, preferring to heed the optimistic message preached by the president. Yet hardly had the last votes been counted than David Stockman, the president's budget director, came up with new estiNicholas Ashford assesses the president's chances of success in his second term nation of vigorous economic growth, continued curbs on Federal spending and a war on government waste would bring the deficit to within manageable proportions - say $100bn - by the time he steps down in 1988. But what can he do? He has already put social security and Medicare "off limits" and has vowed that taxes would be raised over my dead body". The obvious alternative, strongly advocated by conservatives, is a further hacking away at domestic spending pro-

Among Reagan's hardline advisers are Edwin Messe, a White House counsellor soon to become Attorney-General; Donald Regan, the treasury secretary, who is adamantly opposed to any tax increases, and Caspar Weinberger, the defence secretary, who is determined to fend off renewed attempts to nibble away at his Stockman, has warned however supported by a "grand coalition" of House Republicans and Democrats. Baker has the most successful record within the Administration for dealing with Congress and the president would be most unwise to ignore his advice. Baker also believes the president can generate considerable goodwill in Congress if he shows genuine determination to negotiate with the Russians.

High-level contacts have already been made to start the process early in the New Year. The Americans have proposed a new forum which they refer to as an "umbrella". The Russians have expressed interest in the concept and have deliberately refrained from propaganda attacks on Reagan since his re-election.

For the moment the administration's foreign policy "moderates" are in the ascendant. The hawks have undermined their case with the false alert about MiGs being delivered to Nicaragna. The hard-liners, who include Weinberger, William Casey, the CIA Director, and Jeane Kirkpatrick, the United Nations representative, hoped the MiG scare would force the Administration into direct action against the Soviet-backed Sandinista government, a move that would have undermined efforts to improve relations with Moscow. As it turned out the US is continuing its public support for the "Contadora" peace

Reagan is going to have to show the Russians he is firmly in control of foreign policy before he can persuade them to start talking seriously about reducing arms. They fear he could still revert to the "evil empire" rhetoric if he listens too closely to the hardliners. If that were to happen the "window of oppor-tunity" would quickly slam shut -and then he might never achieve the place in the history books to which

Marcos bloodied but unbowed

Guns are part of politics in the Philippines, but the shooting of four some 200 troops and soldiers. prominent critics of President Ferdinand Marcos in the past two months has raised fears that there is a systematic campaign to eliminate troublesome adversaries. All four killings were in the southern island of Mindanao, a stronghold of hostility to the regime, and the most recent is regarded as particularly ominous. The victim was Cesar Climaco, long-serving mayor of Zamboanga, Midanao's second city. Climaco had been waging a bitter war of words against Marcos since the imposition of martial law in 1972. Last May, Climaco won a seat in the national parliament and immediately stepped up his assault. He was especially critical of the conduct of government security forces on Mindanao, where "salvaging" - the summary execution of civilians suspected of sympathizing with the region's communist guerrillas - is a common occurence.

Mayor Chimaco had often warned visitors that "anyone, including myself, can be gunned down in this city, even in broad daylight". That was exactly what happened to him last week. A lone assassin strolled up and put a .45 bullet in his head in full view of horrified bystanders and

Manila newspaper advertisement in which 68 top military men affirmed their "unwavering support and loyalty" for Ver. Another of the capital's newspapers, owned by a family close to Marcos, then revealed that a sizeable clandestine organization had been discovered within the armed forces, calling itself "El Diablo - Crime Busters", and promising its own lethal justice to "clusive criminals in our society". The growing intensity of the guerilla war there has trapped ordinary Filipinos between poorly rained government troops and the "sparrow squads" which the insurgents send out to assessinate soldiers, policemen and others judged to be enemies of the people. For Marcos to attempt to restrain the army's "salvage" operations would mean confronting with the only institution that keeps him in power. It became clear during the Aquino investigation that the Philippine high command is con-trolled by a band of senior officers whose loyalty to each other comes far ahead of service to the nation. General Ver was at the very centre of this inner conclave, and few believe that he will agree to forfeit his influence, even if he does eventually resign. That El Diablo rigmarole," says a western diplomat in Manila, "is the military's way of telling Filipinos that the Aquino business hasn't changed anything they're still calling the shots."

It takes too much to wango

Despite five years of Thatcherism it appears that 1,680 of these gentle herbivores - quasi-automonous non-government organizations - are still grazing on the lower slopes of the public sector. Their cost is to be cut by a fearsome new weapon, "an improved system or defining targets and assessing achievements". All strength to its arm.

Further up the mountain, however, is a species well out of range of the noble lord's marksmanship. It roams in Foreign Office territory and is best described as a wango - a wholly autonomous non-govern-ment organization. I have counted roughly 80 of them, denoted by a code against their name in the supply estimates which means their subsidies are not investigated or controlled by the Comptroller and Auditor General Nor does any annual underspending have to be returned. Not even the Secret Service enjoys such licence.

Wangos are mostly international organizations to which Britain contributes on a formula related to gross national product or treaty agreement. The biggest is the United Nations (contribution £20m), the most notorious at present is Unesco (£4m). There is a multitude of others, including the South Pacific Commission (£228,000), the Franco-British Council (£115,000) and the International Institute for the Unification of Private Law (£26,000).

No good cause need go wanting if it can raise a percentage grant for a brass nameplate and a comfortable home in a salubrious world capital. Conceived by Third World pressure out of western guilt, wangos have discovered the clixir of eternal life: subsidy without accountability. The cost in contributions by the British taxpayer is £106m this year, with a further £300m in soft loans and grants on the aid budget. After up to 40 years of existence, these bodies inevitably find them-selves falling over each other. The British taxpayer this year spent £250,000 on three separate organizations whose declared aim was to promote Nato, apart from £5.8m to the Nato secretariat itself. Aid wangos are the most eccentric; such as the International Potato Centre (£340,000), the International Planned Parenthood Federation (£2.7m), the World Fertility Survey (£112,000), the 1976 UN Fund "to promote industrialization in developing countries" (£350,000).

The smallest must be the Trilateral

Commission "to stimulate thinking on major issues and promote informal contacts between peoples of distinction" in Europe, America and Japan, on a British contribution of just £1,500. This would not fly one person of distinction from London of Tokyo. Financial control in most of these organizations is by their own staff. The British exchequer has only two options, to pay up or incur the odium of getting out. Nor does it only have to pay the subscriptions. Many bodies require the physical presence of British diplomats, which tion for Economic Cooperation and Development, essentially a research institute, demands a full British ambassador and staff resident in Paris. The United Nations demands two, one in New York and another in Geneva. Every UN sub-committee has to be attended by a British diplomat.

The Civil Service minister, Lord If criticized wangos defend themselves with a smokescreen of moral superiority. Most pefer to do "research into" or provide "centres for" or "programmes to promote" good causes rather than tackle any problem at first hand. Yet to attack the administration is to attack its ригрозс.

Many do excellent work. The soft loan packages committed by Britain through the World Bank or the International Development Agency are sensible ways of channelling resources to help poor nations help themselves. Yet who dare question money to "the Fund for the Victims of Torture" (£10,000) or the World Health Organisation special programme in Human Reproduction (£1.8m) or the umpteenth international institute for the study of child poverty? And how are these sums to be measured against the £59,000 to the Rome Centre for the Study of the Reservation and Restoration of Cultural Property?

Many such bodies were set up after the last war to herald an internationalist dawn. They were to be staffed by a new order of global philanthropists, whose asceticism would match their serious purpose, Like the pre-Reformation monastics, many have grown fat and lazy. Few have fulfilled their promise. Some, notably those connected with the UN, have sunk into parodies of themselves; corrupt, extravagant and ineffective lobbyists for sectional interests. They castigate their critics as irreligious and immoral even as they rifle the international poor box.

As the recent log-rolling for Unesco has shown, any inter-national institution can drum up reputable apologists on the mere strength of its title. Such organisations not only discredit themselves but the concept of multilateral charity as such.

Were they ordinary quangos the Government would subject them to audit, cut their grants or kill them dead. Were they national charities, the commissioners would disallow them. Yet as the Foreign Office searches for its £30m cut next year, knows that a hand laid on its £100m of "multilateral contri-butions" will mean trouble. Since most contributions are by formula, any genuine cut in spending entails withdrawal or at least the threat of withdrawal. To the Foreign Office, this instantly makes the Third World militant and our European allies irritated, reduces our international standing, and jeopardizes our long-term interests.

All should be avoided, it says. To save just a few million pounds would mean a sequence of decisions doubtless involving the Cabinet, Partiament and a barrage of moral outrage, however hypocritical. Why not leave the sleeping dogs in their gilded kennels?

I came to opera late, never having been taken as a child. I sing like a frog. When Cheam School was singing The Lady of Shalott en masse for the Christmas concert (crescendo for Out flew the web, and floated wide"), I was the boy given a yellow card and put in charge of pulling the curtains. I think that the plots of most operas are silly, especially the plot of The Magic Flue with that pernicious balderdash about Freemasonry; but for Tamino's sake do not tell B. Levin, or he will try again to clucidate for me the inner meaning of that misty mythology of the Nibelung Saga.

I think that most Verdi is much improved by being subbed down to keep the songs and omit the hysterical recitative; but for Rigoletto's sake, do not tell the Arts Editor, or he will do a fortissimo maledizione. I seldom go to the opera, though I enjoy it greatly when I do. I play it on records all the time, especially when typing. It will be seen that as opera buff, I am a beginner, or slob.

One's choice of the top 10 is necessarily limited by what one has seen and heard; and by subjective factors such as with whom one went, and whether a good time was had by all. The list is provisional, and constantly changing.

For my Planasia, I have to take

Carmen and Tosca for old times's sake. They were the first long-playing records I bought, the latter Philip Jacobson | encouraged by an enthusiastic

I cannot see the problem about what Italian beak. They are pretty crackly books to take to that mercifully now; but I do not suppose we are going to fuss over-nicely about quality of reproduction, especially since in the absence of electricity we are going to have to play them on a wind-up gramo. If we have room for another Puccini, I agree that Turandot and La Bohème are strong candidates. At this stage Mozart barges in and hogs the turntable. We must have. must we not, boys and girls, Don Giovanni, The Marriage of Figuro, that daft old masonic Magic Flute, and Cosi fan tutte, with the title that translates so unsatisfactorily into English? I bleed for Seraglio and Idomeneo. I have never heard La Clemenza di Tito. (Shame, Howard). But we have to leave room for Fidelio. I am jolly well having Semele in there, even if you do not count it as quite a proper opera.

That makes eight. From Wagner I am taking Die Meistersinger. If you let me count The Ring as a single opera, I have to take it on grounds of volume, in every sense of the word But that leaves no room for Verdi. Tough. Guiseppe, you may say: but I think we should try to squeeze one

I suppose it has to be Rigoletto. If so, I regret to have to tell you, chums, that I am having the ENO version set among maliosi on the New York waterfront, with what sounds like Marion Brando singing several parts. But I worry about Otello, even though the plot and words grotesquely oversimplify lago's motivation. I worry about

That makes 10. But hang on there: hold everything. We have left no room for Der Rosenkavalier. And am not going to be marooned with the bloody seaguils without that, I can tell you. IN THE BEGINNING

The level tone and rational procedures of the Warnock committee's report on the ways in which science now supments sexual intercourse as the standard technique of human reproduction had the immediate effect of stilling a rather feverish debate. It was widely, though not universally, thought that the committee had got it about right.

Here is an area of therapy and research primarily addressed to infertility. The therapeutic objecare unquestionably humane. Some of the techniques employed raise acute questions of moral and social acceptability. It is a fast-moving sector of medical science, for it is responsive to the pleas of progenitive deprivation, exciting in a pioneering sort of way, capable of attracting money, a satisfying pitch for fundamental research, and it leads, as likely as not, to conferment on the human race of new powers of self-determination in what might be called the veterinary or stockbreeding dimensions of human procreation.

The regulatory framework proposed by Warnock for the services, techniques and researches surrounding infertility, and involving the manipulation of human gametes and embryos, is the appropriate one surely: some initial legislation to catch up with present or imminent abuses, and then a statutory body of continuing existence to license, regulate, supervise and monitor, also to keep the public informed and to advise the government on legislative requirements as they arise.

mulates its proposals next year it should have no difficulty in adopting that framework, though great care will be needed to get the responsibilities and composition of the licensing body right to make it knowledgeable. enough to be effective without putting it into the pocket of the professionals

The Government is now at the stage of gathering opinions about available. Its function was to Warnock. The House of Lords debated the report at the end of last month and the Commons has its turn today. It was evident from the Lords' debate that there is at least one matter on which Warnock has not established a consensus. This is the use of human embryos for the purposes of research.

It is the question that gave the majority came to the conclusion that embryos at large not destined for implantation can legitimately be experimented upon up to 14 days after fertilization, and that it is also legitimate to create embryos in vitro expressly for that purpose (provided the experimentation is directed to a commendable end). Eighteen out of twenty-six peers who spoke in the debate recoiled from either the second or both of those propositions.

Moral judgment about the use of human embryos for therapeutic experimentation depends on how the embryo is regarded. Is it something in which a human life has begun and is present, a person in potency, or is it simply a collection of cells which, unless it implants in a human uterine environment, has no potential for development" (words used, though not adopted, in the Warnock report)?

The compromise achieved by the majority that "the embryo of the human species ought to have a special status" and some protection in law, but that the protection falls before the superior claims of research and its utility for advances in treatment and medical knowledge, is not an ethically convincing stance. What it grants, it in the same breath takes away. It is embarrassingly (in the context) remi-niscent of the kitchen maid's excuse for her pregnancy - "only a little one". It is particularly vulnerable to erosion of its 14day rule, there being no evident reason that a relevant change in the process of development occurs around that moment, or When the Government for- at any moment until the emergence of the central nervous system, at which point an awareness of pain or something akin to it becomes a possibility and utilitarian ethics, with which everyone feels at home to some extent, come to the rescue. It was not however the function of the Warnock committee to identify and occupy the most secure moral position find a moral basis on which to found public policy in a conteutious corner of medical practice and research for use in a somewhat ethically-chaotic so-ciety. For that the formula looks serviceable, resembling in some respects the position arrived at by another route in the cognate. field of therapeutic abortion.

committee most trouble and on matter which gave the Warnock able, the full particulars of his which it was most divided. The committee very little trouble and generation?

on which, it might be thought, its advice is a bit perfunctory. This concerns the anonymity that shrouds the whole process of third-party procreation, and the proper recording of it.

It must be right that there should exist as full a genetic record as possible of these various transactions; and the commoner they become the stronger the case for a proper record. Access to the record raises secondary questions of some delicacy, but they do not affect the primary responsibility.

The Warnock committee proposes a central register of semen donors as a means of implementing its recommendation that no donor should achieve more than 10 live births. And it leaves to the licensing authority consideration of whether there ought to be a register of births attributable to the new techniques to facilitate follow-up studies. Nowhere does it lay on any public authority a duty to maintain a true and complete genetic record. At one point the committee goes so far as to recommend that falsification of the public genetic record as contained in the register of births should be sanctioned by law by permitting a husband who has consented to his wife's insemination from a donor to be registered as the child's father. Truth should not become a casualty of these procedures.

The committee treats anonymity as if it were self-evidently appropriate, adding only that anonymity protects all parties not only from legal consequences but also from emotional difficulties". Anonymity may do that, but in a matter of this kind it also betokens secretiveness that might suggest a flavour of impropriety, and that could be an important factor in the adjustment of a "donated" child, adolescent or adult to the circumstances of his origin. Acceptability and openness are related.

Warnock wants a person on reaching the age of majority to know he is the product of gametal donation if he is, but of the anonymous man or woman who gave him life he is to get basic information about only the donor's ethnic and genetic health". He is the offspring of a type: let him be content with that, is the verdict. Is a person There is another aspect of the not entitled to know, if ascertain-

THE GCHQ CASE FOR JUDICIAL REVIEW

The Cheltenham trade unions That opinion is in line with may not have profited from taking their case to the House of Lords, but they have done a good service to the general public. They have elicited a bunch of comprehensive and partially reassuring expositions of the present state of the law of judicial review of executive actions. It is a branch of the law that has come a long way in the last thirty years and is still developing. Some recent judgments, including the Court of Appeal in the present case, have given an impression of backsliding. The House of Lords has consolidated the ground gained and hinted at new lines of development. It was argued for the Crown that the Prime Minister's order withdrawing trade union rights from the employees at GCHQ was outsidethescope of judicial review for two reasons: because it was an exercise of prerogative power and because it rested on considerations ofnational security.

There is a weight of ancient and modern authority for the view that exercise of the royal prerogative is wholly outside the ambit of judicial review. This judgment sets aside that view. All the law lords agreed that if, as in this case, the prerogative flows through an order in council that is virtually indistinguishable from an order deriving from statute, the decision is reviewable just as if it rested on statutory power.

As to whether the same applies where the exercise of the prerogative is direct, some preferred not to decide the issue in this case, others opined that what counted was the subject matter of the decision not the source of the power to take it.

previous development and can probably be relied on to prevail.

Lord Roskill gave a list of the sort of prerogative powers that he thought were not susceptible to judicial review: treaty making, defence of the realm, prerogative of mercy, the grant of honours, dissolution of Parliament and the appointment of ministers. Being largely matters of policy they are not amenable to the judicial process. It is when individual interests are affected and legitimate expectations dashed that the courts will prick up their ears. There are three grounds, Lord Diplock said, on which an executive decision might be struck down - illegality (the minister has misdirected himself), irrationality (no reasonable person ...), and procedural impropriety, and he opened the possibility of the courts entertaining a fourth ground, "the principle of proportionality", borrowed from our continental neighbours. Had the GCHQ case fallen to be decided by reference to those criteria alone, the want of consultation before the order was made would have given the unions the judgment they sought. So far so good. Enter national security. With a few brave exceptions (like Lord-Atkin dissenting in a case of administrative detention under Regulation 18B in 1941 - "In this country, amid the clash of arms, the laws are not silent") judges have given an impression that when the words "national security" are pronounced by ministers the courts will fall silent. That is a serious matter for the citizen when the words are pronounced over an ever widening range of activities.

Language is tool and material for expression; it does not express of itself and therefore cannot be attributed with blame. The change in language since King James is insufficient by itself to account for the difference between the Authorized Version and the New English

Bible. The first is literature, the second closer indeed to a "manual

The future of the Church appears less assured: her clergy turn away from our spiritual needs towards the diversion of questionable politics. It is really no surprise that they then fail to find the means to express convincingly what they know in conscience should be expressed. Yours faithfully, NICHOLAS LANGFORD, l Bell Hill Ridge, Petersfield,

Lord Diplock restated the established position: national security is the responsibility of the executive government; decided cases establish and common sense dictates that it is a matter upon which those who have the responsibility, and not the courts, must have the last word; the judicial process is "totally inept" to deal with it. None of that can be gainsaid. However, in no instance of indicial review is the court called upon to substitute its judgment for the minister's. It is called upon to review the manner in which the decision was made, and if the manner was unsafe in any of several clearly recognized ways, to set it aside. Does or does not the same apply where reasons of national security are invoked?

The law lords differed somewhat in the strength of their replies to that question. All agreed that a mere assertion is not enough, there must be evidence that the decision rested upon a consideration of national security. But since the evidence is not open to challenge that does not carry the aggrieved citizen very far. Lord Scarman was prepared to poke a little further into matters: the opinion of the Crown as to what is required to meet the demands of national security might be rebutted if it were "possible to show that the opinion was one which no reasonable minister advising the Crown could in the circumstances reasonably have held". One may, without being careless of the safety of the realm or going soft on security, observe that some further development along Scarman lines would be consonant with the most welcome postwar invigoration of the practice of judicial review.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Irish cornerstone of neutrality

From Mr John MacInerney Sir, The disturbing tenor of your mischievous leader (November 19) its dishonest suggestion that only, those parts of Ireland not controlled by Britain are used as bases for terrorist attacks; its sinister mention of "a legitimate British strategic interest" in ending Irish neutrality; its dark hints of a context "in which Ireland's historic difficulties [sc. Ireland?] may eventually disappear" - shows that you wish (or feign) to misunderstand certain realities

You will scarcely need reminding that wartime Irish neutrality was of some political and military con-venience to a Britain powerless during 1940-41 to prevent a German invasion of Ireland aimed at cutting off the Atlantic lifeline. But Ireland's interests - economic and political today, moral and cultural always extend beyond (without, of course, ignoring) Britain and indeed, if your voice is representative, Britain's.

What you should now understand clearly is why a triple loyalty to Crown, Commonwealth and Nato can never answer to Ireland's triad of aspirations: to realise by peaceful means her pluridenominational republican principles at home, the ideal of true unity in Europe, the spirit of the UN Charter throughout the world.

Her neutrality doesn't "spring from its need to define a separate-ness from Britain" (an enduring and evolving, love-hate relationship requires not marriage but the degree of symbiosis, fruitful as much as fretful, of unalterable physical contiguity); it issues rather from the necessity of affirming a sense of solidarity with the desire, universal in ordinary individuals as in small nations, for freedom from famine

The sincerity of Irish statesmanship over the last quarter-century can indeed be impugned for failing too often "to maintain the physical capacity to carry out its obligations as a neutral"; these, however, are not military (except for UN peacekeeping duties) but moral: viz., the provision of whatever resources of expertise, vision or mediation Ireland can muster to help create a Europe with a world rôle to play in easing tensions between super-powers and in assisting the developing world to bridge the widening gap between North and South (in the Brandtian sense) that exacerbates global misery and geopolitical destabilisation - in a word, to close down the arsenals and open up the granaries.

Ireland's special relationship with the Third World (grounded in sympathies springing from common historical experiences – and no colonised country ever forgets its history) equips her to fulfil a rôle requiring for its "practical validity" weither armed unight nor financial choit but a motal pedigree that no former imperial power, and perhaps only Yugoslavia among "the more professional (sic) neutrals of Europe", can lay unsuspect claim to.

Par from being a symbolic nationalistic humbug which it is taboo to question or discuss, neutrality is the very cornerstone that Ireland must always build her domestic and foreign policy upon, undeterred by the thetoric of what it's hard not to call bullyboy latterday neo-imperialism.

Yours etc, JOHN MacINERNEY 51 Compton Road, SW19. November 20.

Boroughs' spending

From Mr Melvin Mackie Sir, Many of us can only applaud Mr Kenneth Baker's determination to restrict the growth in local government expenditure (leafure, November 14). However, many are disappointed that nothing has been done to actually reform the system. On Mr Baker's own admission, the link between the elector, the ballot box and the rating system is running

A system which allows many of the public to avoid, completely, contributing to local expenditure and when only one ratepayer in three actually pays in full can only lead to abuse. Indeed Mrs Thatcher herself and several of her Cabinet colleagues on several occasions have roundly condemned it.

Mr Baker would be well advised not only to curb expenditure but, to avoid a growing groundswell of discontent among ratepayers, actu-ally carry out the Government's long-standing commitment to re-form the whole system. MELVIN MACKIE, Chairman, Edinburgh Central Conservative

Unwelcome burden of college costs. From Mr C. A. Giles

Sir, The current spate of increased charges for higher education was imposed without a murmur from parents. No wonder the Govern-ment has rushed in with a new additional set of charges for next September. These measures will be disastrous for higher education and one can only deduce that this is a subtle method of cutting university places, with parents taking the blame if they fail to pay up and shut

As a pensioner I feel particularly bitter about the whole affair. For forty-five years I paid into a scheme to obtain a pension which would give me a degree of comfort in my declining years. When my eldest son succeeded in obtaining a place at a university my wife and I were delighted, as neither of us had been able to afford such an education. We were determined that he should have this opportunity.

In his first year our contribution to his expenses was relatively low, my wife having taken part-time work with the express purpose of making sure we had some extra In September we had the shock of the Government's first blow at parental support, our contribution under the ne ew regulations increasing from £695 to £1,503. To meet the latest proposals next September we will have to find a further £238 (The Times, November 17 - "Educa

This year my younger son is applying for a university place. How can we deny him the opportunities given to his older brother? Of course, I could go back to teaching but no authority would employ a teacher over 68 years of age either full-time or part-time. An unem-ployed daughter has added to our financial problems.

I served during the last war and came through convinced that we would establish a better life for all, amongst which would be a dignified existence on retirement and educational opportunities for all without financial barriers. I did not envisage that in my retirement I would have to keep adult dependants.

Perhaps your better informed readers might suggest ways or probe regulations which would relieve pensioners of so great an obligation. Educationalists might delve into education Acts to unearth regulations which guarantee young people free access to higher education.

Meanwhile, I hope the demonstrations being planned by the student union will be opened to. some of us parents. Yours sincerely, C. A. GILES. 36 Bressey Grove, South Woodford, E18. November 16.

From Dr Jack L. Hoppe

Sir. With the proposed parental contribution to the tuition fees of students in higher education the parents enter an entirely new ballgame. But then so, in particular, do the universities.

It is one thing to be in so remote way answerable to the taxpayer for the quality of the tuition given to students, but quite a different matter to be in part answerable to their parents, who are directly contributing from their income to the tuition fees. Under such circumstances parents will be very much more concerned than hitherto to ensure that value for money is given and will be willing to accept nothing but the best trition for their youngsters.

May we assume that Sir Keith is currently working on a scheme which will involve parents in the monitoring of such tuition?

Most are aware that there is room for considerable improvement in the teaching performance of a very large number of dons. Perhaps the new approach to tuition fees, part paid by parents, and the logical conse-quence of this, could benefit future nerations of university students, Yours faithfully, JACK L HOPPE, 5 Hazlitt Drive, Maidstone, Kent, November 19.

From the Headmaster of Trinity

Sir, Those of us who work in independent education have always argued that parents should be allowed to spend their money as they wish. We respect the decisions of those parents who choose not to spend their money educating their children at our schools. It is not, however, the parent but the student who decides whether to enter further

We know that many parents do not provide their assessed contribution to maintenance, with some, but obviously temporary, hardship to the student. The incorporation of tuition fees in assessing parental contribution changes the picture in a potentially most damaging way.

What happens if the fees are not paid? Is the student to be sent down for the sins of his parents? I suggest that the Chancellor's desire to save public money will lead to an unjustifiable pressure on many potential students. Falklands sovereignty

From Mr Julian Amery, MP for Brighton Pavillon (Conservative) Sir, Mr David Steel, in his article of November 16, has no right to say that "it has been declared British policy to secure a transfer of sovereignty over the Falklands Islands to Argentina.

Certainly British governments have had talks with Argentina on the subject. In each case, however, Parliament has refused to contemplate a handover of the islands unless this was the wish of the islanders. The islanders have invariably made it plain that they wished to remain British. Their experience of Argentine occupation, as I can attest from a recent visit, has only strengthened this resolve.

Mr Steel also implies that Britain should cede the islands to Argentina to strengthen that country's fragile democracy. Everyone must welcome Argentina's return to democracy, but this is hardly a cause for which we should sacrifice British interests, let alone British people.

Would it not be better, instead of giving in to Argentinian demands, to approach the problem more constructively?

The South Atlantic is potentially important strategically. If the Panama Canal were closed or the Suez Canal closed again, a major part of world trade would have to come through the South Atlantic. Its

Chatsworth drawings

From Mr Peter Hoos

Sir, The British Government, through its ministers and advisers, is treating the Duke of Devonshire, and the purchasers of the Chatsworth old master drawings, with contempt and lack of honour. Mr John Rowlands, Keeper of Drawings at the British Museum, has played a dual role. Firstly, together with colleagues, he rejects the drawings which the duke most generously offered to the British Museum for £5.5m. In the opinion of the museum experts there was an overvaluation of £250,000.

To their considerable surprise, and I trust embarrassment, the collection realised £21m at auction in July. The Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art has delayed the export licences on a significant number of the drawings. Mr Rowlands, "wearing his other hat", is an adviser to the committee. The museum made a massiv misjudgment in their appreciation of the value of this collection, even

Theatre at risk

From Mr Anthony Field

Sir, There always appears to be a list of worthy persons, such as "Lord Olivier and others" (November 17), who are prepared "to protest most vigorously against the Arts Council's decision" to do almost anything other than take on additional commitments for which it is not supplied with the required moneys.

Whether it is having to cut a fringe theatre company, a regional dance company, one of the London orchestras, the English Stage Company, a Scottish art gallery or a Welsh touring theatre, we are now paying the price for what earlier Arts Councils chose to do in the 1950s and 1960s (and I readily admit I was a contributory factor, being Finance Director in those years) – that is, they risked taking on just that extra piece of work which proved to successive governments that the arts are a good investment.

Thus "Lord Olivier and others" should surely be protesting vigure ously against any Government decisions which ignore the economic facts about the returns we obtain from our drama, music, film, dance and opera activities rather than rail against the Arts Council tearing its heart out about being forced to emasculate any of its work.

Joffé proves an action director of fine ambition

The Killing Fields (15) Warner West End

Annie's Coming Out (PG) Classics Chelsea, Tottenham Court Road

Not for Publication (15) Classic Tottenham Court

A Christmas Story (PG)

The ambition of The Killing Fields is undeniable and creditable. Its budget of £14.5m, is not exceptional in Hollywood terms, but massive for a British production. Despite this big financial commitment, the film boldly essays a story with a political context, a style that is novel in this country where the cinemagoing public is notoriously apathetic about politics. particularly when they are seen as being other people's. The film moreover uses American money and addresses an American audience without evading the uncomfortable but essential issue of its subject.

That subject, as Bryan Appleyard made clear in yesterday's interview with the director Roland Joffe, is Cambodia, the most devastated victim of the global war of ideologies, It is based on Sydney H. Schanberg's despatches to The New York Times, but particularly his 1980 article "The Death and Life of Dith Pran". Dith Pran was a New York Times stringer and Schanberg's assistant in Phnom Penh. As the Khmer Rouge converged on the city in April 1975, Schanberg arranged the evacuation to the U.S. of Pran's family. When the two men were captured by the Khmer Rouge, Pran succeeded in saving Schanberg and a group of other Western iournalists

Bruce Robinson's screenplay (his first to go into production) is admirable for its economy in exposition and dialogue. It does not however succeed in resolving the two major problems of the subject. One is to balance a strong personal story, vital to engage an audience in the broader theme, with the documentary background. The documentary element suffers most, and the audience may well be at a loss to understand the politics in general and in particular the origins and mad terrorism of the Khmer Rouge (though one sharp line speaks of it as an inevitable product of millions of dollars' worth of American bombs).

Emotional strength from personal experience: Haing S. Ngor in The Killing Fields

The personal story of the friendship of Schanberg and Pran presents the writer with a crucial structural problem; throughout the major part of the action the central figures are separated and without communication. The stronger of the two divorced elements of the narrative is the story of Dith Pran's privations in the land of the Khmer Rouge - thanks in large part to the direct and touching performance of Dr Haing S. Ngor, a non-professional whose personal experiences closely paralleled those of Dith Pran himself. Schanberg becomes a much less engaging figure. Crack war correspondents are rarely the most sympathetic of screen characters; and Sam Waterston is not the actor to compensate for the depth and warmth that are absent from the

The Killing Fields is certainly a remarkable feat of logistics for Joffe, making his first feature film after successive careers in theatre and television. With the collaboration of an outstanding cinematographer, Chris Menges, his management of the vast crowds, exotic locations and broad panoramas marks him as an action director of the kind for whom the British cinema has rarely provided

He is at his best in virtuoso setpieces like the tragi-comic sequence of the evacuation of the American Embassy. Elsewhere his view often seems oddly calculated and detached from the tragedy: self-consciously picturesque images of carnage; deco-rous silhouettes against red skies; collages of horror, in which the blood. bodies, dead dogs, injured cows and crying children are all too carefully and apparently composed over-emphatic musical effects like the chorale accompanying the evacuation of Phnom Penh or John Lennon's "Imagine" over the final images of the victims of Cambodia. While the ambition is unbounded and exemplary, the achievement is uneven.

Annie's Coming Out, directed by

Gil Brealey, is also based on a true, heroic story, an Australian cause célèbre of a few years ago, Rosemary Crossley, a teacher in a Melbourne home for spastics, recognized that one of her most severely handicapped charges, far from being retarded, was a young woman of exceptional intelligence. Ironically the discovery upsetting as it was to the status quo and hospital statistics – was not at all welcome to the hospital and health authorities, or even to "Annie's" family, and Crossley only succeeded in securing the young woman's discharge by taking her case to the courts. "Annie" subsequently took a degree, while Crossley wrote the book on which the film is based.

The final irony was that the original "Annie" was unable to play her own role in the film as intended, because, the moment she left the home and underwent careful feeding, she suddenly and rapidly grew to adult performance and magnificent, compelling eyes defy any feeling of unease in face of her handicaps.

Crossley (renamed Jessica Crossley (renamed Jessica Hathaway") is played by one of the best and certainly the most beautiful of Australian actresses. Angela Punch McGregor. Far from being painful. this is as gripping, optimistic and energizing a story as any film currently on show.

Paul Bartel's follow-up to Eating Raoul, Not for Publication, is another joyful celebration of low comedy and bad taste which parodies wacky comedy of the Thirties, films noirs of the Forties and a good deal else between, with some sardonic inciden-American morality. Nancy Allen plays a lady reporter on a New York scandal sheet who in her private life is a volunteer helper in the liberal mayor's campaign for re-election. Her investigations in company with a naive photographer (David Naugh-ton, who reveals a charming line as a song-and-dance man) lead her into unpleasant discoveries about the intimate connexions of the city's establishment and underworld.

The film is slacker in structure than Raoul and has less strongly carica-tured central performances; but there are some well-built sight-gags and Bartel's usual extravagant eccentrics, including a Nixonesque mayor (Lau-rence Luckinbill), a musical psychic rence Lucknahill), a musical psychic (Alice Ghostley) a greedyguts editor (Richard Paul) and an amorous dwarf (Cork Hubbert). Bartel himself makes a brief, telling appearance as a crippled television director.

A Christmas Story is a funny little film which is a great deal more attractive but likely to prove very much less commercial than Porky's. the last effort of its director, Bob Clark. It is a nostalgic, impressionistic recollection of a nine-year-old's Christmas in Indiana in the Forties. The child is played by Peter Billingsley, owlishly, bespectacled, understandably bewildered by the caprices of grown-ups, and alternately obsessed with problems with the local builty and the best tactics to ensure the airgun he covets for Christmas.

The boy's confused, well meaning parents are nicely played by Melinda Dillon and Darren McGavin; and Clark (who collaborated on the script with Jean Shepherd, author of the original novel In God We Trust, All Others Pay Cash), accurately recaptures moments like the thrill of getting Ovaltine Club membership through the post, and the disillusion of meeting a store Santa at close

The performance reaches its Georgina Hale's Aricia, it is for reasons of policy. Left alone with her confidente Ismene peak in her croaked prayer to Venus, claiming that they are two of a kind, it is the truth. It may be a falsely aggressive reading of the character, but it makes your hair stand on end.

Gerard Murphy's Theseus strikes me as the one big miscalculation: a shaven-headed, dog-like figure, who delivers practically the entire part in a snarling monotone, he achieves some extraordinary breath-control, but blackens and over-simplifies the charac ter beyond recognition.

Royal Concert

Handel Albert Hall/Radio 3

Your Majesty: Master Kenyon, overwhelmed by his inadequacy and by the feebleness of his mild expressions to convey the effect of Wednesday evening's concert, has laid down his pen so that I, after the passage of ten score years since I recorded the first Commemoration of the incomparable Handel, might take it up once again.

I have heard tell, by those whose report I fear is less than trustworthy, that there are those who disdain in Your age to hear this pleasing, grand and sublime music with many choirs of voices and assemblies of instruments, shunning the thunder of the drums, the tread of the double basses, and the noise of the grand organ. Yet it may safely be pronounced that, from the progress which practical Music has made in this country since Handel's time, his work was never so well performed under his own direction as it was on Wednesday evening under the distinguished Sir David Willcocks and Mr Meredith Davies.

How aptly he wrote who asked a century ago: "Who ever heard of a choir too large for Handel? Not though nations should be formed into choirs and the genius of thunder were to swell the harmony till it shook the very spheres, would the true votary of Handel cry 'Hold, enough!' "The aggregate of voices and instruments had here its full effect, and near a thousand musicians in the immortal choruses of Israel in Egypt and the Messiah made it difficult to determine which was the best, or had the grandest effect, from the very uncommon force and accuracy with which they were now per-

And yet more notable than the glorious numbers of the performers was their extreme youth, for as I was informed they are but fledgling members of the newly formed colleges of music under your protection.

How near, or how distant, the time may be, when the art of combining sounds shall be brought to its highest perfection by the natives of Great Britain, this is not the place to enquire; but progress has been sure.

He must have been not only a fastidious, but a very ignorant and insensible hearer who did not receive new and exquisite pleasure from the execution of Ariodante's sublime aria "Dopo notte" by Dame Janet Baker, and from the sober beauty of Miss Lott and Mr Roberts, though I believe I might prefer the noted talents of Mr Nicolai Gedda to be heard in our Italian opera houses,

Invitation Concert

BBCSO/Buckley BBC Maida Vale

Whatever one might think of American music (and on the evidence of the number of concerts we get of it. English promoters generally choose not to think of it at all), one cannot help admiring its self-confi-dence. Whether it be the product of a philosopher like John Cage, a so-called minima-list like Steve Reich or a complex master like Elliott Carter, it makes its statements with an openness that instantly disarms.

The same applies to more conservative composers than those, as demonstrated in this enterprising BBC Invitation Concert. The broadcast, when it happens, will be essential listening not simply for the music but also for some scintillating playing by the BBC Symphony Orchestra, here directed by the young American Richard Buckley, who won a prize in the 1982 Rupert Foundation conducting compe-tition. This was his first BBC engagement, and I shall be surprised if there are not more. written when he was 30, may say nothing particularly earth-shattering but it certainly fulfils the composer's stated intention of communicating honestly and directly.

Though a jagged sort of piece, it owes much to Copland, both in its rhythmic vigour and in the spacious, easily recognizable themes that permeate the slower sections, particularly in the vast and varied first movement. The writing for orchestra is brilliant, technically far from easy; that for the soloist is awesomely challenging, though John McCabe dispatched the fistfuls of notes with quite astonishing assurance. The ferocious moto finale was simply perpetup

Compared with this the rest of the work, and especially the superficially exciting finale, is emotionally and intellectually a disappointment. Not so Ives's Decoration Day, whose distant, mystic nostalgia confused razzmatazz, and, of course, finally and ecstatically

Cheaper loans to sustain flagging economies

The half-point cut in clearing bank base rates yesterday looked, on the face of it, a direct response to the overnight discount rate reduction in the United States. The direct link between the two events may have been rather weak, in fact, but they contained an important message

A British Telecom-timed base rate reduction this week, barring disasters, had always looked on the cards. Tuesday's wobble in sterling, when it briefly dropped below $1.22 and lost 0.8 on the sterling index, have put an untimely spanner in the works. Now, the authorities are as relaxed as it is possible to be about the exchange rate. Given sterling's initial pickup yesterday morning, following National Westminster's base rate announcement, that is no bad thing.

The Government's anxiety to reduce interest rates for economic growth reasons has been made apparent. The discount rate cut by the US Federal Reserve from 9 to 8½ per cent, the first reduction since December 1982, is the first positive sign of the re-elected Reagan Administration's concerns in the same area.

The point about Americans relative immunity from high interest rates because of tax breaks is familiar. The logical follow-on from this is that interest rate reductions in the United States will have less economic impact than similar reductions would have in Britian. But when the Administration has no room for tax cuts, and when growth in the third quarter is down to an annulized 1.9 per cent and slowing, a blunt weapon is no better than no weapon at all. US prime rates, which should be down to 11 per cent within the next couple of weeeks, may then be ready to go still lower.

The major drag on American growth at present is the huge trade difficit, which probably lopped 3 per cent off growth in the thire quarter. Britain has its own balance of payments problems, as indicated by the £851 million trade deficit in October. However, the Treasury's confidence of a current account of zero for 1984 and the number of special factors contained in the October figures, suggest that major worries on the balance of payments can be postponed.

The downward path of interest rates in Britain will be a slow one. The significance of yesterday's reductions, taken in combination with the Fed's discount rate cut, is that for the first time in a while, governments on both sides of the Atlantci are puling interest rates in the same direction and for the same reasons.

Prudential converted to Liffe's virtues

The London International Financial years old last month, is not the strongest of markets but fears of infant mortality can now be set aside. Liffe will be with us for the foreseeable future (apart from domestic neglect, the main threat to its growth is an American monopoly in futures trading) and plans for its development, if they are brought to fruition, should ensure the exchange a permanent place in the spectrum of London markets.

As Mr Michael Jenkins, chief executive, has recently reminded me "Liffe provides trading instruments to enable corporate exposure to rising (or falling) interest and currecy rates to be neutralized, to allow more confidence planning in spite of volatile money markets". Since May the shape of the FT-SE futures contract, Liffe has offered to equity portfolio managers, investors and issuers of shares a similar method for controlling their risks.

What the exchange now needs above all is more users and more volume, both of which would bring marrower price spreads for buyers and sellers.

Unfamiliarity, conservatism and sniffness toward "gambling" are obstacles in LIFFE's path. But there are encourage-ments too. The latest is the decision of the Prudential to use the exchange's facilities in pension fund management. Trustees especially are loath to accept LIFFE's practical virtues as a means of enhancing portfolio performance and limiting risks when conventional market decisions seem unusually hazardous.

So far LIFFE has attracted the enthusiastic interest of a few nationalised industry pension funds. The conversion of the Prudential might well encourage others to come in and provide the exchange with a timly boost, while it waits for the arrival next year of the building societies, for which a new short gilt contract will be fashioned, and the host of primary gilt-edged dealers in the post 1986

Perks and private shareholders

It has been an up and down year for investors who like to spice their dividends with perks and concessions on the goods of companies in which they own shares. Encopean Ferries, which was responsible more than any other company for promoting the popularity of shareholder concessions, finally decided that the 160,000 people attracted to its books, mainly in search of cheap cross-channel trips, were more of a liability than an asset. The trippers have been shunted into a preference share siding. But the idea has received a compensating boost from BT's telephone vouchers for the small shareholder temporarily though they are.

Seymour, Pierce, the stockbroking firm, welcomes the BT innovation in the new 1984 edition of its guide to concessionary shareholder discounts. It sees it as an acknowledgement by the Government that perks "have a uniquely important contribution to make in encouraging new investors". It regrets the time limit.

The latest Seymour, Pierce list numbers a hundred companies offering anything from 15 per cent off men's clothes to a £2 discount on a five-hour cruise on Lock Lomond. The appreciation of shareholder loyalty by more big companies means that concession-seeking small shareholders can now readily assemble a portfolio of a dozen blue chips, many of them among our most progrecive big companies.

Not everyone will be pleased. As European Ferries discovered, accumulating a lot of small shareholders can be a costly administration nightmare. Trading in small lots of shares remains uneconomic, certainly until the age of electronic high street share dealing dawns.

Nor is that the only potential drawback of the market romantic's ideal of mass direct share ownership. As Bank of England director, Mr David Walker, reminded us in a recent speech in Rome, it was market forces - spreading risk and saving cost - that pushed small investors into unit trusts and the like. Moreover, modern experience suggests that small investors play even less of a role than the big City institutions in forcing changes on poor management before most of shareholders' money has been lost.

Clearly, it will take more than Government exhortation to encourage millions of ordinary people to own shares, let alone take an active role as shareholders. It will require a new culture. Finding out what small shareholders really want from the companies they invest in and giving it to them could play a big role in such a transformation, especially when they want the sort of individual concessions that are not available through pooled investment. When many millions do on shares, it that ever comes to pass, it is a fair bet that the affairs of companies will attract much greater public interest, and small investors will become more aware of what is going on. Only then are they likely to take an active part, whether to resist takeovers, unseat management or, on a non-financial plain, tell their companies not to trade with the Soviet Union or South Africa. worry about the environment and so on.

Offering shareholders personal con-cessions seems as promising an avenue to spreading share ownership as, for instance, tax incentives. The privatization programme could play a bigger part in this. Not free tanks from the Royal Ordnance Factories perhaps, but as Seymour, Pierce points out, cheap air fare for British Airways shareholders would be something desirably different.

onrho men to resign

from Fraser By Our City Staff

Almost seven years of guer-rilla warfare looked set to end yesterday when the two Lonrho representatives on the House of Fraser board agreed to resign in five weeks.

Lord Duncan-Sandys, Lonrho chairman, and Mr Roland "Tiny" Rowland, Lourho's chief executve, confirmed to the rest of the Fraser directors at a board meeting in Glasgow that they will resign from the board at the end of December.

The news came in a three-line statement from House of Fraser on which neither side would comment. The statement did not say Lonrho was giving up any representation on the board nor that directors of the Alfayed Investment and Trust company - which bought the 29.9 per cent Lonrho stake in Fraser earlier this month - would be appointed instead.

Pressure has been building for the Lonrho directors to stand down since it was revealed that three Egyptian businessmen, Mohamed, Salah and Ali Al-Fayed, had paid the mining and casino company £138 million for the Fraser stake. Two of the brothers want to join the board themselves but not until the Lourho directors had resigned.

The Austin Rover strike has ended but BL still faces serious problems needing government attention soon

Doubts cast over the future of BL by the strikes at Austin Rover have been dispelled by the management's typically firm and effective response. If anything the dispute will have strengthened the favourable public image of a company turned round from disaster by aggressive and dynamic new management. But that image belies the reality that BL still problems that will require the Government to take some difficult strategic decinions sooner rather than later.

In spite of huge injections of investment from the taxpayer -more than £2 billion in the past eight years - BL has simply not made the decisive breakthrough to long-term financial viability that had been hoped. Austin Rover, the volume car heart of the state-controlled business, made only a small operating profit in 1983, the record year for vehicle sales in the United Kingdom. Its market share was only 18 per cent.

The company now has three new-generation models in the Metro, Maestro and Montego, yet despite topping the sales league with a 23 per cent share of the market in October, BL's market share this year so far is slightly down on its perform-

The most worrying feature of this is that the best-selling Metro is now halfway through the four to five years now seen as a model's typical life cycle. In the boom year of 1983, when BL was struggling to break even, the leading US producers were making the record profits needed to pay for the design costs of new models for the late 1980s.

That means the Government will have to decide whether it is prepared to inject still more large-scale investment into BL to allow it to keep up in the race. The time for such strategic thinking is surely now, when the waters are relatively calm, rather than in the crisis new mass market model to compete on a world scale can

Germany have made massive atmosphere that might well investments in their motor car industries right through the In making its decision, the 1970s and are continuing to do Government will have to take so, if we are to maintain a truly account of two factors over

The long-term outlook for the motor industry is poor, except in the developing nations. A recent report from the Organi-There is little doubt that Austin Rover will require another £2billion of funds from zation for Economic Cooper-1986 onwards for new design costs. Who will pay for it this time: the Government?

The overriding reason for Western Europe will be between supporting BL through its crisis 1.3 and 1.4 per cent for the rest years was the potential threat to jobs if it failed. While that still of the century and only 0.7 per cent in the United States. That means competition is likely to remains a motive, the scope for employment in the motor car intensify, the home base is industry is becoming progressunlikely to be dynamic and ively thinner with the advent of robots. Studies by General Motors and Volkswagen have shown that 95 per cent of the weak competitors are going to come under even greater press-ure. Removal of the premium on car prices in Britain can only expose BL's position more starkly. assembly work can be done by robots. Improvements in microprocessor technology have made robots cheaper - often At the same time, the market and technical innovation will half the cost of an employee demand an ever greater invest-five long-term options for the future of BL. Privatization: As with Jaguar, privatization is a simple matter for profitable parts of BL Unipart, now confirmed as the next on the list, will face no difficulties in that respect. Austin Rover, however, is a different proposition. When the crunch comes, there may not be Making foreign cars under licence: - This appears to be a soft option involving the least design costs. It is likely, if privatization takes place, that the new owners would follow this path to survive. As GM, Ford and the European manufacturers are competing in the United Kingdom on equal terms, the likely arrangement for licensing would be with the Japanese. Honda already designs for BL. The problem with this option is that Japanese cars sell well because of their reliability rather than their design. One may find in such circumstances that both design and reliability are sacrificed (this is no reflection on the quality of our products but the Japanese are very good in this respect).

 Closure (if politically acceptable): It would be wrong not to consider this option even if only for academic interest. At least it shows (in investment terms) the limit of the government's downside risk.

If one assumes that the closure would follow the discontinuance of the current European car price cartel and the price level for cars would come down to the Continental level, the picture appears less gloomy than we are led to believe. If the entire market share for BL cars were taken over by imported cars (an unlikely event), we would face a balance of payments deficit of about £1.8 billion. This amount would be compensated (more or less) if the price of imported cars were to come down to the Continental level.

It is possible that the job losses (in BL and in its component industries) and the reduction in people's buying power would be compensated more or less by the spin-off from the extra injection of consumers' funds released through reduced car prices. Lower car prices would also help bring down the rate of inflation.

Nobody is suggesting the closure of Austin Rover but it is necessary to consider it, if only to evaluate the other alternatives the Government will face as BL's dominant shareholder and paymaster.

consumer products group, produced interim pretax profits 23 per cent higher at £79.9 million on turnover 12 per cent ahead at £920.1 million, but the market ungratefully mar-ked the shares down 9p to

The rate of increase will be slower in the second half, particularly as the impact of the price reduction of Rufen in the US starts to bite, but analysts are already pencilling in higher profits forecasts for the full year.

The first half was buoyed by a good retail performance. After stripping out property profits and a £5.8 million credit, following a government review of overhead costs, against a charge of £6.1 million in first half 1983, the retail side's trading profits rose by 14.4 per cent on turnover up

Real growth was an impress ive 5.8 per cent and margins gained a ½ per centage point. The new specialist image, which Boots is setting much store by, is apparently working.

On the pharmaceutical side the US produced trading profits of £9.8 million against £9.2 million in the whole of 1983/4. Despite the 25 per cent price cut on Rufen in June to meet competition (Rufen accounts for half the US sales) Boots should easily make £15 million in the US this year.

Analgesic Advil (Nurofen in Britain), sold in the US through American Home Products, has picked up 2 to 3 per cent market share since May, but there has been significant discounting in the US market

Boots should comfortably make £180 million this year against £148.6 million last year, excluding property pro-fits, putting it on a prospective p/e ratio of 13.8 on the higher 40 per cent tax charge strong performers recently, the rating does not look demand-

Gilts

Gilt traders spent most of their time yesterday speculating on the current range of transfer fees for fledgeling superstars of the embryonic new gits mar-ket. Nevertheless, prices were soggy again for the fourth session running. The market may have started to run out of steam albeit temporarily. steam, albeit temporarily.

The clearers 4 point base rate cut failed to spark off a buying spree, leaving the yield curve looking fairly steep. Three-month money yields some 911/16, a rate well in line with the new base rate level. and which also has official sanction. The Bank of England chopped its dealing rates

Yet five-year high coupon shorts are now yielding 10% per cent. The steepness of the slope over five years suggests that precautionary line ahead of the British Telecom flotation.

American bonds have moved ahead well this week, and the 1/2 point cut in the Fed Discount rate may not yet be fully discounted in yields. The fall in October durable goods orders suggests the US economy has stopped dead in its

Meanwhile, sterling has been wobbly on rumours of oil price cuts. A visible trade deficit of £851 million hardly adds up to an export boom.

Powell Duffryn

Powell Duffryn's interim figures - down 11 per cent at £6.1 million and way down the bottom end of analtsts' hopes disappointed the market and the shares dropped 15p to 308p. They could have further

The group, with its broad spread of interests and inevitable exposure to the mercurial workings of the British economy, appears to have been caught in the crossfire of political and economic events.

The miners' strike has affected the group quite badly. Some £10 million of sales and about £2 million of profits may have been lost to the shipping divisions because of the dis-pute. The group is putting a brave face on second-half prospects, suggesting that any profits shortfall will be pro-portionately less than for the portionate first-half.

Analysys also fear that Powell Duffiyn's lucrative Newcastle to London shipping run may suffer from the Central Electricity Generating Board's decision to commission its own shipping fleet.

The local authority spending moratorium in South Wales has also hit the group. Construction profits have slumped by around £1 million to £2 million, although there are signs that local authority spending is picking up.

The divisional breakdown does reveal some high spots. Engineering profits, for example, have improved by about £2 million to £2.9 million, while satisfactory oil trading has muffled the impact of the miners' strike on the fuel distribution interests; profits here have risen from about £1.9 million to £2.7 million.

Mr Mike Murphy of Quilter Goodison, a Powell Duffrynwatcher doubts whether Hanson Trust will move to build on its stake by bidding, at least not before the miners' strike is concluded. He also puts the net asset value at around 370p, not the broadly muted 400p.

It is based on an idea which has been developed in Sarasota, Florida, over the past seven years. The plan is to offer a restaurant menu and surroundings which compare with the likes of London's Garfunkels or Guggenheims - with one extra ingredient as the dessert or coffee is brought to your table, you can ask for a magician to appear at your side to perform a few tricks.

This, say the Rosenberg family who developed the concept, encourages people to talk about the restaurant and come back to have a different set of tricks performed by one of a repertory of seven or eight magicians. It also forms a natural ending to the meal, encouraging customers to get up and go while they are still feeling euphoric from the little private show that has been laid on for them.

That ruse is designed to achieve an average of 2.52 covers a seat a day in high season, at an average price of £11.95 for dinner and £5.95 for lunch,

It seems to have everything proven concept, experi-enced board, 22-page prospectus including detailed profit projections. All it lacks so far are any premises from which to trade. The scheme has been organized by United Trust and Credit, the Mayfair issuing house which brought Applied Holographic and Gable House Properties to the stock market, as wellas floating the less successful Publishing Holding. They have three men on the Magic Moment board, along with 30-year-old Jeffrey Rosenberg amd Harold Tillman, the businessman who was recently involved with Lincroft Kilgour and Sumrie Clothes.

UTC will have a 10 per cent stake in Magic Moment, and has signed a five-year consultancy agreement with the company, giving UTC £10,000 a year plus 2 per cent of monthly turnover. Sea-Scape, the Rosenberg company, will hold 17.14 per cent in return for a year's knowhow.

The money being raised should be enough to finance about three restaurants before shareholders are asked for more. As a greenfield operation, the shares are obviously a gamble. But, aside from the BES tax breaks, investors can comfort themselves with two meals a year at a 121/2 per cent discount.

Dennis Howell likes to see himself, not without justification, as the people's lifeboat for sport. Fire the flare, and there goes Dennis sliding down his parliamentary pole, pulling on his office while throwing the odd wisecrack over his shoulder, and faunching off the Westminster slipway into fear-some provisional seas as lone sayiour.

Yesterday, at the Central Council of Physical Recreation annual conference, he hit the waves in a spectacular spray, having himself fired the flare for the rescue of the Sports Council, It is not that the Sports Council, founded 20 years Sports Council, founded 20 years ago, and reshaped by Royal Charter in 1970, is on a reef, but is engaged with the CCPR in a destructive battle of divided interests and expensive litigation against each

By Stuart Jones Fifth round draw Grimsby Town v Norwich City Ipswich v Southampton or QPR

The Milk Cup, the most expendable element of the overcrowded English pro-gramme, is designed to be little more than a subsidiary and profitable first division fixture list. Of the 10 clubs to reach yesterday's fifth round draw, Grimsby Town alone disrupted the plan and they survived by removing the former favourites,

Three dress rehearsals will be held over the next 22 days for possible ties to be staged in the middle of January, Southamp-ton visit Portman Road next Saturday, Chelsea go to Hillsborough the following Saturday and Tottenham Hotspur travel to Vicarage Road the Saturday after that.

Not surprisingly, such events have become a regular feature of the competition. In the third round, for instance. Tottenham knocked out Liverpool a fortnight after being beaten by the same score in a televised League fixture and Everton triumphed at Old Trafford four days after humiliating Manchester United at Goodison Park in the League.

Half of the fourth round ties, neluding both of those that have yet to be resolved, also involved pairs of first division clubs. The public are no longer attracted by the heavily sponsored and largely predictable package; attendances have falen in all rounds so far but the third, and that included no fewer than eight replays.

As only Chelses of the four home teams can expect a gate of over 25,000, the next round is likely to produce further evidence that the tournament is declining in popularity. At the almost solely to the huge and increasingly necessary financial rewards that it offers.

Why neurologists want to deliver a fatal blow to boxing

Manila a few yearts after that renowned boxing bout. I saw a fair amount of blood spilt. True, the crowd yelled in their frenzies, but their cry was for victory, for joy in the spectacle of combat. It has to be admitted that some of the contestants died in the course of entertaining the crowds. Well, getting on for 50 per cent of them. And a lot of the winners would never

And a lot of the winners would never fight again, though there were a couple of fat, jolly chaps with needlen and threads swigging San Mignel out of the bottle ready to patch up the superficially wounded. A good time was had by all, a lot of money changed hands, and every one there, apart from the dead contestants, agreed that it was a fine day's sport.

The sport was cock-fighting. The sport is banned in Britain because it sport is banneo in primin occase it is a barbarous anachronism. The British Medical Association has thrown its weight behind the call for the sport's abolition, and that meant that I paid a quessy visit to Harley Street listening to a neurologist saying horrible things like: "The brain is the texture of lightly cooked scrambled eggs suspended inside a boney thing suspended inside a boney many called the skull."

People don't acknowledge that the aim of boxing is to cause brain damage. People point out that rugby is dangerous, that National Hnut racing is dangerous. They are perfectly right. But the aim of these sports is not to cause injury.

Every year, we read about some poor boxer or other who collapses and dies after a boxing bout, perhaps as the result of a single, crushing blow. That is but part of the problem repeatedly being punched in the head has a subtle and cumulative effect. It has been proved that this has happened to boxers in the past: cases in the United States are still occurring, in Britain reports are more sparse, but again, still are more sparse, but again, still

After 20 years competition the ex-After 20 years competition the ex-boxer can be found with shurred speech, unsteady legs, lapses of memory, violent tendencies, and the general appearance of having had a few too many. That is a cironic condition: the condition called, almost frivolously, punch-drunken-ness. Or as the BMA report boxing reports, in its sober way:

Boxing is a contest in which the

Dr Harvey decided to take up the cudgel against boxing after meting an amateur boxer twice, the second time a good deal after the first. The physical and social decline in the man was immense: "He had become as near criminal, a tragic man. The brain-damaged boxer becomes a social responsibility and a menace. Ofter violent, often a drunkard." Dr Harvey fears that boxers are still unaware of the nature of the risks they take by boxing. But there is

The BMA report on boxing could only conclude by regretting that "the British Boxing Board of Control appeared unwilling to cooperate". Perhaps the organization is uninterested in a boxer's safety. The Board refused to supply information, or even to send representatives to the working party.

Boxing has been made safer, not safe. Shorter bouts, less frequent contests, fewer mismatches reduce the problems: they do not remove it. As for the head guards seen at the Olympic Games: these make the head a bigger target and increase the torsional effect on the brain of a glancing blow.

"No, there is only one way to make boxing safe, and that is to take the head out of the target area. That would still give you a spectacle of unquestionable athletic skill. But when approached with the idea, boxing people are forced to admit

However, in time, people will look at clips of boxing bouts like, say, the "Thrills." in Manila", and be shocked that such barbarity was soncked that such harbarry was permitted by civilized people. CRICKET: ENGLAND ENJOYING THE FUN WHILE IT LASTS

Tavaré finds himself alone

By Ivo Tennant

Chris Tavaré is unlikely to gain the support of the Cricketers' Association for any appeal following Mant's refusal; yesterday to release him from his contract.

Jack Bannister, the Cricketers' Association secretary said: "We have yet to support anyone who wishes to break a contract. A player cannot communicate with another club whea under contract, so it is difficult to see which way Tavaré

It could be argued that Kent's refesal is parochial. It is understandable that Tavaré should want to go having been removed as captain after just two years by the club's executive committee in September. In 1976, the committed did not stand in the way of Dennes in similar circumstances. The difference perhaps is that whereas Deaness was then nearly 36, and coming to the end of his career, Tavaré is 30, the age at which, says Colin Cowdrey, an English batsman is at his neak.

So will Tavaré refuse to play for Kent next summer under the captainty of his friend, Christopher Cowdrey? The committee obviously think not. Tavaré owes his cricketing education to the county, cricketing education to the county, having come under the guidance of Colin Page, Kent's director of conching, when nine, and the committee men are banking on him changing his mind. They have retained their offer of a fresh four year contract on their top salary scale. Yet, a measure of Tavare's determination is that he was prepared to spurn the benefit he would inevitably have received by 1988.

Even in mere were not the incentive of a Test place to regain, Tavaré is not the type to stop trying. Kent are adamant that nothing Tavaré says or does will make them change their stance, So now, this introverted, Lowry-lean figure, who inadvertently courts rean figure, who imparemently course controversy, will again shut out the world from his home near Cauter-bury and ponder anew. It is remarkable, too, how Kent and Yorkshire, perhaps the proudest of the criteting cannotes became Gatting provided the hun-dreds of little children squating on the ground's dusty edges with a spectacle they will never forget as he drove the little legspinner, Gudge, with ferocious power. All six of his sixes came against Gudge and they were all hit straight or thereabouts. Davies to stalk giraffe at home in Queen's

By William Stephens Chris Ronaidson has chosen Queen's Club as the venue for the challenge by Wayne Davies for his world title over the best of 13 sets on March 15, 17 and 19. These two are seeded to meet in the final of the British Open singles championship, sponsored by George Wimpey, which begins at Queen's Club today, Davies, an Australian who is head professional at the New York Racquet and Tennis Club, first challenged Ronaldson in March 1983 at Hampton Court, to four in a contest marted in its later stages by an injury to the challenger's back. Since then the most signal development in international com-petitive Real Tennis was Ronaldson's first defeat in 19 tournaments at the hands of his deputy professional at Hampton Court, Lachlan Deuchar, in the semi-finals of the Scottish Open at Troon on March 4, 1984. Deuchar's 6-2, 6-3 win marked the end of a run of 63 victories in level singles compe-titions internationally over a period

Spark ignite and set the league alight

By Paul Harrison Specawell Rucaser and Team Mizzuno both lost their unbeaten records in the English league, sponsored by Britvic, last weekend, which allowed Capital City Spikers, the reigning champions, to join them at the head of the table. Tomorrow the Bristol team Mizzuno is must London.

Complacency cost Mizuno dear against Spark Crook Leg, who previously had only won two league sets all season. Mizuno even won the first set, but Spark played well above their previous form to take the next three. Speedwell's inexperience showed against Spikers, who won 3-2 at Bath in a two-and-a-half-hour struggle. Although Speedwell had Pincott and Ashman in good form, Spikers' backcourt defence saw them through. There was one surprise in the second round of the Royal Bank Cup in Scotland, with Telford Spikers, the second division side, beating AT Mays, of the first, 3-0. They meet another first division side, KAs, in the third round on December 15, which will also include Volvo Trucks, the holders, MIM and Glassow Grees, who won their first victory in national competitions so far this season. Finnies Sport, formerly Dodds Troon, took over the leadership of the women's first division, with a 3-2 defeat of Scottish Farm. Finnics, the only unbeaten team, play Telford, the league cup holders, this weekend.

His Lordship was unable to see, subject to what he should say later, that there was any logical reason why the fact that the source of a the manner of its exercise that he would possess were the source of the power statutory.

That right of challenge could not, however, be unqualified. It must depend on the subject matter of the prerogative power that was exer-cised. Many examples were given during the argument of prerogative powers which as at present advised his Lordship did not think could properly be made the subject of judicial review.

Prerogative powers such as those relating to the making of treaties, the defence of the realm, the prerogative of mercy, the grant of honours, the dissolution of Parliament and the appointment of ministers as well as others were not, but hearthy transportible to indicinal

LORD BRIGHTMAN agreed that the appeal should be dismissed on the ground of national security. Like Lord Fraser, he would prefer to leave resolution of the question whether judicial reviewability might extend, in an appropriate case, to a direct exercise of a prerogative

Law Report November 23 1984 House of Lords

National security justifies government failure to consult GCHQ trade unions

Regina v Secretary of State for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Another, Ex parte the Council of Civil Service Unions and Others Before Lord Fraser of Tullyhelton.

Roskill and Lord Brightman [Speeches sold November 22]

Although excecutive action carried out in pursuance of a power derived from the prerogative was in general amenable to judicial review, an instruction given by the respondent the Minister for the Civil Services (the Prime Minister), under article 4 of the Civil Service Order in Council, 1982, to the effect that staff at Government Communications Headquarters (GCHQ) would no longer be permitted to belong to national trade unions, which would otherwise have been given unfairly because there had unions and staff concerned, had national security.

The House of Lords dismissed an appeal by the Council of Civil Service Unions and six individuals from the Court of Appeal (Lord Lane, Lord Chief Justice, Lord Justice Warkins and Lord Justice May) (The Times, August 7, 1984), who had reversed Mr Justice Glidewell's grant of a declaration, in proceedings by the appellants under Order 53, rule 3, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, for judicial review, that the minister's instruction was invalid and of no effect (The Times July 17, 1984).

Article 4 of the 1982 Order in Council provides: "As regards her Majesty's Home Civil Service - (a) the Minister for the Civil Service may from time to time make regulations or give instructions - . . . (ii) for controlling the conduct of the Service, and providing for...the conditions of service of all [persons employed therin]; ..."

Mr Louis Blom-Cooper, QC, Mr
Patrick Elias and Mr Richard Drabble for the appellants; Mr Robert Alexander, QC and Mr John Mummery for the respondent

LORD FRASER said that GCHQ was a branch of the public service under the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the main functions of which were to ensure the security of the United Kingdom military and official communications and to provide signals intelligence for the Government. Those functions were of great importance and involved handling securit information with the andling secret information vital to the national security.

Since 1947, all the staff had been permitted, and indeed encouraged, permitted, and indeed encouraged, to belong to national trade unions, and most of them had done so. Six unions were represented, all mem-bers of the Council of Civil Service Unions. Until the events with which consultation between the official and trade union sides about all important alterations in the terms and conditions of employment of the staff. All that had been abruptly

It was necessary to refer briefly to the events that had led up to the respondent's instruction, given on December 22, 1983. Between February 1979 and April 1981 industrial action had taken various forms - one-day strikes, work-to-rule and overtime bans. It must have had some adverse effect upon the work at GCHQ, especially by causing some interruption of the constant day and night monitoring of foreign signals communications. It had been taken mainty in support of pational trade unions, when they were in dispute with the Government about conditions of service of civil servants generally, and not about local problems at GCHQ. In 1981 especially it had been part of a campaign by the national trade unions, designed to so as much damage as possible to government agencies including GCHQ.

A circular letter dated March 10,

1981 from the Society of Civil and Public Servants, in a paragraph headed "Selective strikes", stated: "Union members at certain key government sites are now on permanent strike. This is the first phase of the selective action: it includes naval supplies and dock-yards, locations where the govern-ment finance machine can be disrupted, a government surveil-lance centre and the DHSS contributions records computer.

Among the selective strike areas referred to in the list appended to the letter was "GCHQ Bude, Cornwall". The seriousness of the intended challenge to the security system of this country could be gauged from the literature issued at the time by the appellant union, of which the following were examples:

"Our ultimate success depende upon the extent to which revenue collection is upset, defence readi-ness hampered, and trading relations disrupted by this and future action".

"Walkouts in key installations have affected Britain's defence capability in general, and crippled the UK contribution to the Nato exercise 'Wintex'."

cxercise wintex.

"... another vital part of the Government's Composite Signals Organization ... is to be hit by a strike from Friday, April 3."

"48-hour walkouts have severely hit secret monitoring stations belonging to the Composite Signals Organization. The Government is clearly worried and will be subject to huge pressure from Nato allies."

Defence plans have been upset by the continuing action at naval supplies depots, dockyards, and other crucial establishments." Approaches had been made on behalf of the Government to local union officials, and later to national officials of the appellant union, to dissuade them from action that would directly adversely affect operations at GCHQ. Some cooperation had been given by the local officials, but none at all by national officers.

After a subordinate of a former director of GCHQ had sought to explain to the general secretary of one of the trade unions the scrious one of the trade unions the scriots consequences that might follow from disruption of certain parts of GCHQ work, the answer had been "Thank you. You are telling me where I am hurting Mrs Thatcher

In 1982, the Government had considered whether measures in the exercise should be taken to prevent the conferred to recurrence of such disruptive action.

But at that time the intelligence functions of GCHQ had not been publicly acknowledged by the Government, although they had already been referred to in the newspapers, and it had been decided that no action that would involve public acknowledgement of the activities should be taken.

in May 1983, following the report of the Security Commission in the case of Geoffrey Prime who had been convicted of espionage at GCHQ, the intelligence role of GCHQ had for the first time becur publicly acknowledged, and the reason for avoiding public action to deal with disruption had thus been The most important and difficult question raised by the appeal concerned the royal prerogative. The Order in Council of 1982 had been issued by the Sovereign by virtue of her prerogative, but of course on the advice of the Government of the day. The respondent submitted that it was not open to review by the courts because it was an emanation of the

That submission involved two propositions. The first was that prerogative powers were discretionary, that is, they might be exercised at the discretion of the Sovereign (acting on advice in accordance with modern constitutional practice) and (acting on service in accordance with modern constitutional practice) and the way in which they were exercised was not open to review by the courts.

That proposition was vouched by an impressive array of authority.

Attorney General v De Keyser's Royal Hotel Ltd ([1920] AC 508) showed that the courts would inquire into whether a particular prerogative power existed or not, and if it did exist, into its extent. But once the existence of the extent of a power were established to the power were established to the satisfaction of the court, the court could not inquire in prietary of its exercise. into the pro-

That was undoubtedly the position as laid down in the authorities and it was plainly reasonable in relation to many of the most important prerogative powers that were concerned with control of the armed forces and with foreign policy and other matters that were unsuitable for discussion or review in the law courts.

In the present case, the preroga in the present case, the preroga-tive power involved was power to regulate the Home Civil Service, and his Lordship recognized that there was no obvious reason why the mode of exercise of that power should be immune from review by the courts. Nevertheless, to permit such review would run counter to the great weight of authority.

Having regard to the opinion that he had reached on the respondent's second proposition, it was unnecessecond proposition, it was unnecessary to decide whether her first proposition was sound or not and his Lordship preferred to leave that question open until it arose in a case where a decision on it was necessary. He therefore assumed, without deciding that all propages without deciding that all powers exercised directly under the preroga-tive were immune from challenge in

The respondent's second proposition was that an instruction given in the exercise of a delegated power conferred by the Sovereign under the prerogative enjoyed the same immunity from review as if it were itself a direct exercise of prerogative power. That depended on whether the power conferred by article 4 of the 1982 Order in Council on the respondent of "providing for ... the conditions of service" of the Civil Service was subject to an implied obligation to act fairly.

There was no doubt that, if the Order in Council had been made moder the authority of a statute, it would have been so construed. His would have been so construed. His Lordship was unable to see why the words conferring the same powers should be construed differently merely because their source was an in council made under the

Whatever their source, powers that were are defined, either by reference to their object or by reference to procedure for their pressed or implied, were in his Lordship's opinion normally subject to judicial control to ensure that they were not exceeded. By "normally," he meant provided that considerations of national security did not require otherwise.

The courts had already shown themselves ready to control by way of judicial review the actions of a tribunal set up under the preroga-tive see, for example, R v Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, Exparte Lain ([1967] 2 QB 864). The appellants submitted that the respondent had had a duty to respondent had had a duty to consult the appellant union, on behalf of employees at GCHQ, before giving the instruction on December 22, 1983 for making an important change in their conditions of service. Their main reason for so submitting was that the employees had had a legitimate, or reasonable, expectation that there would be such prior consultation would be such prior consultation before any important change was made in their conditions: see O'Reilly Mackman ([1983] 2 AC 237). It was clear that the employees did not have a legal right to prior consultation.

The evidence showed that, ever since GCHQ had begun in 1947, prior consultation had been the invariable rule when conditions of secretary ways. service were to be significantly ahered. Accordingly, in his Lord-ship's opinion if there had been no question of national security involved the appellants would have had a legitimate expectation that the respondent would consult them before issuing the instruction of December 22, 1983. The next question, therefore, was whether it had been shown that consideration of national security the respondent's instruction had been proper or fair or justifiable on its merits. Those matters were not for the courts to determine. The sole issue was whether the decision on which the instruction had been based had been reached by a process that was fair to the staff at GCHQ. His Lordship had already ex-plained his reasons for holding that, if no question of national security had arisen, the decision-making process in the present case would have been unfair.

The respondent's case was that she had deliberately made the involve a real risk that it would occasion the very kind of disruption [at GCHQ] which was a threat to national security and which it was intended to avoid". The appellants had invited the House to hold that that had not been shown to have been the true reason for her decision.

The question was one evidence. The decision on whether the requirements of national security outweighed the duty of fairness in any particular case was for the Government and not for the courts; The Government alone had access to the necessary information, and in any event the judicial process was unsuitable for reaching decisions on national security.

fully challenged, on the ground that it had been reached by a process that was unfair, then the Government was under an obligation to produce evidence that the decision had in fact been based on the ground of national security: The Zamora ([1916] 2 AC 77). The evidence in support of this part of the respondent's case came from an affidavit by Sir Robert Armstrong, the Secretary to the Cabinet. The affidavit set out the respondent's view that to have entered into prior consultation would have served to bring out the vulnerability of areas of operation to those who had shown themselves to those who had shown themselves ready to organize disruption. That must be read along with the earlier parts of the affidavit in which Sir Robert had dealt in some detail with

The affidavit, read as a whole, did undoubtedly constitute evidence that the respondent involved a risk of precipitating disruption at GCHQ. His Lordship was accordnot only could reasonably have been based, but had in fact been based, on condiderations of national security, which had outweighed what would otherwise have been the reasonable expectation on the part of the appellants for prior consul-

He would dismiss the appeal. LORD SCARMAN said that he would dismiss the appeal for one would dismiss the appeal for one reason only. He was satisfied that the respondent had made out a case on the ground of national security. He had no doubt that she had refused to consult the unions before issuing her instruction because she had ferred that if she did union. organized disruption of the mon-toring services of GCHQ could well He was satisfied that that fear had been one that a reasonable minister in the circumstances in which she had found herself could reasonably have entertained and that she could reasonably have considered such disruption to constitute a manional security.

Like Lord Diplock, his Lordship believed that the law relating to judicial review had now reached the stage where it could be said with confidence that, if the subject matter in respect of which prerogrative power was justiciable, that is, if it was a matter on which the court could adjudicate, the exercise of the power was subject to review in accordance with the principles developed in respect of the review of the exercise of statutory power. The royal prerogative had always been regarded as part of the common law, and Sir Edward Coke had had no doubt that it was subject to the common law, "the King hath no prerogative, but that which the law of the land allows him." It was, of course, beyond doubt that in Coke's time and thereafter prerogative power had been limited to inquiring into whether a to inquiring into whether a particular power existed and, if it did, into its extent: Attorney General v De Keyser's Royal Hotel Ltd. But that limitation had now gone, overwhelmed by the developing modern law of judicial review.

Just as ancient restrictions in the law relating to the processive weight.

law relating to the prerogative writs and orders had not prevented the courts from extending the require-ment of natural justice, namely the duty to act fairly, so that it was required of a purely administrative act, so also had the modern law extended the range of judicial review in respect of the exercise of prerogative power. Today, therefore, the controlling factor in determining whether the exercise of prerogative power was subject to judicial review was not its source but its subject matter.

His Lordship agreed, subject to his comments, with Lord Diplock and Lord Roskill.

LORD DIPLOCK said that the English law relating to judicial control of administrative action had been developed on a case to case basis that had virtually transformed basis that had virtually transformed it over the last three decades. His Lordship had derived little practical assistance from learned and esoteric analyses of the precise legal nature, boundaries and historical origin of the prerogative, which was a part of the common law, or of what powers exercisable by executive officers acting on behalf of central Government that by executive officers arming behalf of central Government that were not shared by private citizens qualified for inclusion under that

Nevertheless, whatever label might be attached to them there had unquestionably survived into the present day a residue of miscel-laneous fields of law in which the executive Government retained decision-making powers that were decision-making powers that were not dependent on any statutory authority but nevertheless had consequences on the private rights or legitimate expectations of other persons that would render them subject to judicial review if the power of the decision-maker to make them were statutory in origin. condemned criminals, of nonours to the good and great, of corporate personality to deserving bodies of persons, and of bounty from moneys made available to the executive Government by Parlia-ment, they extended to matters so ment, they extended to matters so vital to the survival and welfare of the nation as the conduct of relations with foreign states and what lay at the heart of the present case – the defence of the realm against potential enemies, or "national security".

His Lorship said no reason why simply because a decision-making law and not a statutory source it power was surely to hamper the should, for that reason only, be continued development of adminisimmune from judicial review. Indicial review had developed to a Lord Atkin had once called, in a stage when one could classify under three heads the grounds on which administrative action was subject to control by judicial review: "il-legality", "irrationality" and "pro-cedural impropriety".

As respected "procedural impro-priety," his Lordship saw no reason why it should not be a ground for judicial review of a decision made under powers of which the ultimate source was the prerogative.

The crucial point of law in the present case, which had never been identified or even adumbrated in the respondent's argument before Mr Justice Glidewell and so, excusably, found no place in an otherwise impeccable judgment, otherwise impeccable judgment, was whether procedural propriety must give way to national security when there was conflict between, on the one hand, the prima facie rule of "procedural propriety" in public law, applicable to a case of legitimate expectations that a benefit ought not to be withdrawn until the reason for its proposed withdrawal had been communicated to the person who had theretofore enjoyed that benefit and that person had been given an opportunity to comment on the reason, and, on the to be taken in the interests of national security, for which the executive Government bore the responsibility and alone had access to sources of information that qualified it to judge what the necessary action was.

To that, there could only be one LORD ROSKILL also dismissing the appeal on the ground of national security, said that to speak today, as Blackstone had done, of the acts of the Sovereign as "irresistible and absolute" when modern constitutional convention required that all such acts was done required that all such acts were done by the Sovereign on the advice of, and would be carried out by, the Sovereign's ministers currently in Treasury Solicitors: Lawford & Co;

Remission of arrears additional judge of the Queen's Bench Division, on November 15 allowed an appeal by way of case stated from the refusal of Camber-

Regina v B It was clear from R v Satnam ((1983) 78 Cr App R 149) that there was no place for an objective test of recklessness in the definition of the offence of rape, the Court of Appeal (Criminal Division) (Lord Justice Watkins, Mr Justice Tudor Evans and Sir Ralph Kilner Brown) stated

Nissan follows Ford to keep market share

British market was introduced about eight years ago to save UK-based carmakers suffering the same fate as the once all-conquering British motor cycle industry. It has been successful in its original aim, but is now beginning to have a new and disturbing influence on an already.

When the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders (SMMT) sat down with the Japanese Automobile Manufacturers Association (JAMA) to thrash out the original agreement, the most contro-versal issue after they had agreed the overall ceiling for Japanese imports was the proportion to be allocated to Wisely, the SMMT left the allocation to the association; and it allocation to the association; and it chose the easy way out by fixing market shares at the proportion each company then held. That was greeted with delight by the privately owned Datsun UK (now, Nissan UK), run so effectively by Mr Octave Botnar. It accounted for more than half of Japanese sales here. But it has been a sore point here. But it has been a sore point half, and is planning to move from

Now that is market hyping gone mad, and it is time the SMMT and JAMA got together and came up and Alfa insists it will not sell a contast it in pristine condition. In the contast it is right. Alfa Romeo (Great Britain) seems to have spent the last four years tumbling from one crisis to another. It has had several mangement shakeouts. The latest brought the installation as managing director of Mr Rinaldo Hercolani. He came Until recently, Nissan UK could something cheaper and more in line sell every car it could lay its hands with his reduced sales targets of on. Its dealerships were widely 4,000 cars this year and 4,500 next year. That compares with 13,000 not capable of giving the compensation only five years ago.

One of Alfa's biggest setbacks was Whatever was said to Lucas had the desired effect. The Maestro EF I have just been testing is the sweetest running, safest handling family-carcum-performance hatchack I have driven to date. The addition of a rear anti-roll bar and a thicker roll-bar at the front were all that was needed to match handling to the increased power.

There are contenders such as Fiat's very hot Abarth 130TC and the even faster, Lancia Delta HF turbo, which shade the MG's 0 to 60mph in 8.5 seconds and 115 mph top speed, but none comes close to matching its interior space and accommodation. It is also one of the few four-door models in the sports hatchback sector.

Immunity call for JPs over legal decisions

Privatization blamed for child labour

Child labour, filthy hospital words, classrooms, and streets, are listed among the effects of "privatizing" local authority and health services in a Trades Union Congress report published yesterday.

In a document detailing 70 cases of "privatization gone wrong", which is being sent to senior local authority administrators, the TUC cites two examples of children under 16 being employed to clean hospital wards and schools.

In Merton, London, last year several cases of 15-year-olds and one 13-year-old working for Academy Cleaning Services were reported. Office Cleaning Services, contracted to clean Addenbrooke's hospital, Cambridge admitted last year to employing without permits three children under 16, who were then sacked.
